For Sale: HP3586B Frequency selective level meter VLF receiver

This unit has the high stability oscillator and is excellent condition. No dents, no scratches, and no dust inside whatsoever. I believe it was rack mounted at an environmentally controlled site and seldom used. I don't have the feet and the small blank panels (where the rack ears normally go) but these are common size. This unit works fantastic and has a new NICAD memory battery installed. I replaced one of the jacks in front with a BNC (easily reversed mod that screwed in). I also put a nice black anodized aluminum spinner knob on the VFO shaft encoder for ease of tuning. It makes for a very sensitive VLF receiver and can measure extremely low levels with great accuracy. By the way, there is an RF output jack on rear which enables you to sweep filters etc.

The service manual is included.

$495 plus shipping from central florida

Free to join the forums, free to access the database - which IS what the OP asked for - frequencies.

Not free to run an ARC program and automatically download the data.
But, then, neither is the ARC program.

Lennie, Lennie, LENNIE!

How SOON you FORGET!

You let that license EXPIRE back in October 0f 2000 ! ! !

Or so you said!...Of course every Amateur Licensee except Morkie and Brain jumped on you for that...Knowing full well that GROLs do NOT "expire" until YOU expire.

Of course it's YOU who is always chiding Amateurs for not knowing anything other THAN Amateur Radio, which is a pretty stupid claim...But then you ARE pretty stupid.

And here you are spreading some more of that "stupid" around....

Silly Lennie...Tricks are for kids!

This is where your analogy falls apart. CW is currently very useful to hams. It is in daily use. However, the arguments have already been presented and those with closed minds have rejected them.

Sorry, but your wrong, my analogy is just fine for this subject. CW to a ham, like carpentry to a mechanic, can be useful BUT is NOT NECESSARY for each to do what they want to do effectively and properly.

Don't be one of those closed minds.

Yes, a ham CAN use CW if he wants and more power to him/her to do so. A mechanic CAN learn to be a carpenter if he wants to and more power to him/her to do so. But carpentry will not make a mechanic a better mechanic, no more than CW will make a ham operator a better ham operator. More useful to themselves and others, but NOT better.

Just because carpentry COULD maybe be useful to a mechanic does not mean that he should be required to learn carpentry to be a mechanic. A mechanic can be a damn good mechanic without picking up a hammer and a ham can be a damn good ham without touching a key.

I said it before and I'll say it again. 70 years ago a good mechanic needed carpentry skills but no more. 70 years ago a good ham needed to know code but no more. A code test for todays prospective hams is like a carpentry test for todays prospective mechanics.

Yes, proven that you haven't ever attended one.
Your own posts prove that.

Marky confirms he married a shemale in <1154036039.815804.294820@p79g2000cwp.googlegroups.com>:
"posted you can prove it for yourself anytime you can catch him at home"

Mark Morgan replied "yes I did. your point?" when confessing publicly to having been sodomized in <1150581379.052544.216...@r2g2000cwb.googlegroups.com>.

Markie the illiterate moron confirms that AB8MQ was never accused of sodomy while at the same time confirming he was in <1153945599.494230.59710@m73g2000cwd.googlegroups.com>:
"no wismen was never even accused of sodomy in the service"

Marky fucks up bigtime on http://www.the-forum.us/boards/ubbthreads.php?Cat=0 in post #5185 - 07/12/06 11:57 AM
"what s your excuse for not upgrading to extra?"

Marqueer "an old freind" <kb9rqz_ars@hotmail.com> admits to being at a KKK rally in <1145994920.497145.57590@t31g2000cwb.googlegroups.com>:
"I was sorta a KK rally one"

Mark Morgan <konstans@geocities.com> admits he has never been successful learning morse or anything else in<34CFB2CE.7F36@geocities.com>:
"This assumes that you can learn Morse in the first place. I have spent years without sucess"

Markie Morgan, idiot shatters the irony meter when he pegged it when it was suggested he take a remedial English course for his illiteracy in <1150559315.854057.26550@p79g2000cwp.googlegroups.com>:
"no illeteracy it is plain to see that"

Mark C. Morgan KB9RQZ blows the lid off the irony meter instead of his usual blowing preference, a hard cock in Message-ID: <enfi32hqa2hgtl4pl3ov9ah7vt055dkf5n@4ax.com>:
"you don't know or use english very well...gte help"

Markie Morgan, kb9rqz, proves his illiteracy when he slobbered in Message-ID: <1147884138.829873.289830@j33g2000cwa.googlegroups.com>:

"Icertainly can so I am not ileiterate"

Illiterate Mark C. Morgan KB9RQZ proves he has no degrees, but "several" lies to cover it up in <1149266387.476878.26540@i40g2000cwc.googlegroups.com>
"I have a degree weveral of them thay are NOT needed"

Illiterate dumbass Mark C.Morgan pegs the irony meter when his claims of superior "intelligence" is shown when he misspells "intelligence" in <1149941234.898740.289670@u72g2000cwu.googlegroups.com>:
"Wisemen is not more intellgent than me, he is not as ainteligent as my cat"

Markie, who claims to be Jewish, exposes his actual racist Neo-Nazi leanings in <1150211918.885491.37890@u72g2000cwu.googlegroups.com>:
"killing you would make the world a better place. you do make the case for gassing the feeble minded well enough to make the NAZI's look justified on that one"

Markie thinks Wiseman posts from the library exclusively in <1149356359.633336.281150@i40g2000cwc.googlegroups.com>:
"yep that is Wismen cited for jaming 20 m with filth now doing online everyweekday (unless the local library is closed"

Marqueer Morgan, KB9RQZ admits he sucks cock in <1150379423.544324.227310@g10g2000cwb.googlegroups.com>:
"I do have gay sex partners"

When you have to spend time building a skill, you spend more time learning other related things as well. Hams that haven't had to study to pass a 13 wpm CW exam, probably don't know the written portion of the exam as will as hams that did. If I hadn't had to pass 20 wpm for my Extra, I would have taken the exam a lot sooner, but as I had to build my CW abilities, I also spend more time learning the theory too. It made me a better ham.

You people don't want knowledgable hams anymore. CB'ers dont have to learn CW, are they better?

Was code the ONLY way to learn the written portion? Besides, using a bunch of beeps to spell out characters over the airwaves takes no technical ability at all. Here in Canada, a no-code license requires MORE technical skill than a code license. In other words, here in Canada you need to learn MORE to pass a no-code license since learning code is a motor skill, not a technical one.

>You people don't want knowledgable hams anymore.

Learning code does not impart any type of "knowledge" any more than learning roller skating.

>CB'ers dont have to >learn CW, are they better?

Based on the CBers I used to hear on the higher sideband channels, I heard very little of the insults I have seen here spewed by some of the pro-coders. Therefore, I'd say that they were at least better behaved than the aforementioned pro-coders.

Yes, there were assholes on CB, but CB didn't make them that way. By the same token, learning code will not turn an asshole into a nice guy. CB is just a ham radio in the embryo stage, a zygote. The only real difference between CB and ham is the choices of bands and the power of the transmitter, when you really look at things in the most basic sense.

I don't think he can get a TS merely for making empty threats to increase the Sacred Poast Count. Tim Brown set the bar for the TS award, and the bar remains high.

I have been watching this thread for a while and now I must join the fray.

The term "investment" is very misleading. To explain my position, I am in agreement that CW testing should go the way of the dinosaurs. I have no problem with technical testing, as a way to ensure that potential Hams can operate their radios properly, without causing interference with neighbors and other Hams world wide. There is also a safety factor, with transmitters that can kick out a LOT of potentially dangerous power. So, technical exam = good idea.

Here in Canada, CW is not required IF you achieve at least 80% on your technical exam. You need at least 55% WITH CW.
http://strategis.ic.gc.ca/epic/internet/insmt-gst.nsf/en/sf08435e.html
This seems fair, to me.

As for the "investment", not all investments are valuable. I invested years of training to be a fully qualified mechanic. There is considerable value in that investment, obviously, as it is my bread and butter.

But, would my investment be more valuable if, for example, if an additional year of carpentry training were required for me to be certified? I mean, after all, cars had wood frames and bodies at one time so a mechanic would have needed carpentry skills...back in the 1930's. Such an investment would be a bad one. The skills would have no value and do nothing to enhance my skills as a mechanic. The extra investment would have no return with regards to being a mechanic. Carpentry would not make me a better mechanic and would not prove to the world that I really wanted to be a mechanic.

CW is as useful to todays Hams as carpentry is to a mechanic. A good thing to learn, and potentially useful, but should not be a barrier.

But then again, a mechanic might need to do urgent bodywork on an 1930's wood-bodied ambulance and therefore save somebodys life. ;-)
{hehe...sorry..just had to pour on more coal..}
Just about as likely a scenario as CW being the only way to save a life.

But then, if I were stranded on a desert island and found some old war time aircraft wreckage, I could modify a magneto to be a spark generator and spark out an S.O.S. My mechanical skills help me there.

Well......could happen!!

Perhaps if RS didn't sell so much redundant Sprint Telephones, overpriced DVD players and TV's and their UTTERLY USELESS junk toys that start to appear each Labor Day and multiply right up till Xmas, their sales would rise. Personally however I would not miss them if each and every RS were to close and the company was to go the way of FW Woolworth.
Most of the stuff you can get at RS you can usually get at Walmart for 50% less price anyway, plus Walmart employees are usually a tad more intellegent than your average Radio Shack stooge.

Al, I wouldn't have thought you were right--except that you turned out to be exactly right.  :-)  The very next day I turned the thing on and everything was exactly as it had been before.  My best guess is the same as yours-- that I hit a button accidentally.  Can't believe I didn't try off-and-back-on a time or two that day.  Maybe I really AM as chuckleheaded as my wife always says I am.  ;-)

I'm not sure I recall all the other posters idea of investment - but "mine" - was referring to the time/cost how ever little - "spent" or "Invested" - if you will - in the way of time to study or prepare for the exam - acquire equipment AND to actually go on the air to make use of it. So - yes it "can" be looked as an investment - even if in a "minimal" sense of the word.

IN the way I "think" you're referring to - as an investment towards a "rewarding career" or leap forward into life - eh - depends on the person. Many do NOT make electronics their lifes work. BUT, many have started from ham (some from CB and then ham) and went on into some electronics or electrical field. So for "them" - it "was" an investment of sorts - into their future.

Just like another part of this thread where "memory and memorization" was being used, hacked, slanged - the word "investment" could also go that direction. It is all in how you want to look at it and perceive it.

Just my 2 cents!

If this is true, it isn't so surprising - a few stores have closed locally. Many are not as busy as they once were and I suspect "might" be going the same way in the near future. "SOME" things are still able to be gotten there that Wal-Mart doesn't supply - BUT - then again - those are the things which "experimenters", "builders", "technicians", "radio enthusiasts" would buy. ALL ELSE - is "Wal-Mart" related type items. Heck - even "Wal-Mart" sells phone plans now for at least a couple companies but they don't hound you when walking in the door to buy one. "IF" Wal-Mart sold "ALL" items that RS handled and "Cheaper" - yeah, I think RS would go DOWN.

Lets not give Wal-Mart TOO much credit here - I hear they're not doing so well all the sudden - either. The local store - ranked one of the top sellers in the nation - parking lot and aisles always full of shoppers, bringing in "millions" a day (data acquired from a good source) - is laying off people, cutting back hours, freezing pay raises, etc. AND I hear that is a trend across the nation in "Wal-Mart". So - even that giant may be coming to it's knees. My question on this issue, is I wonder if it has anything even remotely related to do with the "mexican" hiring policies they were busted on? A retaliation of having to pay "higher" wages to Americans - or shall we say "Legal" residents? They closed a store down in Canada when the people there wanted to form a "union" - so I heard in a news column. Sure makes you wonder. Its amazing what the holder of the wallet can do!

It is interesting (in a sad way) to see these big companies going belly up or at least having woes....... It makes you wonder where we are actually headed. HERE - Wal-Marts ARE one of the biggest employers. If they go out - the unemployment rate will be higher than George Bush Jr. can count. Almost as high as his deficit.
I know Wal-Marts and yes some others too - already gone by the way side - have been accused of killing off the Mom and Pop stores, but the whole picture just plain SUCKS.

I guess the adage applies - it IS a "Dog eat dog" world out there.

Hey, "Dave," since when does the FCC mandate all hams MUST "work DX?" [try to remember that "the DX community" does NOT issue/grant/authorize amateur radio licenses, only the FCC]

"Working DX on HF with CW" is an OPTION, not a requirement.

In fact, the FCC doesn't even mandate 'working' a foreign radio amateur at all. ['foreign' meaning any country outside USA jurisdiction]

>It's your choice: if you want to play the DX game learn the rules including 25 >wpm CW.

"Dave," you really need to be reminded that the FCC does NOT mandate/require/encourage ANY "DX contacts." Neither does the "DX community" grant any licenses OR make any "rules" that ALL US radio amateurs must follow.

Oh, and "Dave," the REAL US amateur radio regulations require passing a FIVE WORD PER MINUTE (equivalent) manual telegraphy test (15 words per minute with the "farnesworth" approved equivalent rate), not "twenty-five words per minute."

"Dave," have you been licensed a long time? I don't recall ANY FCC requlations requiring a "twenty-five" rating, only the OLD regulation (prior to mid-2000) and that only for Extra class.
I'd say you really ought to review the latest rules that apply in this new millennium. You can review those for free at the United States Government Printing Office website under "Code of Federal Regulations." You can also get it at the ARRL website since the ARRL seems to think they are the only "official" source for everything amateur...

>If you want to operate an appliance, but an appliance.

You mean EVERYONE "following the rules of the DX Community" uses homebuilt radios? All have built their own keys so that they don't use appliance keys? Amazing...

How does anyone "but an appliance?"   :-)

["Dave" is a suspect banker in the investment trade?]

>The time investment is not as much as it seems.

Dee, the "time investment" for MORSEMANSHIP depends entirely on the psycho-acoustical aptitudes of the learner. "Learning" a psycho-acoustic skill is NOT an intellectual one, it is a physical one.

>That is even more true of >someone who has experience in related fields or has experience in the art of >can often read up enough in a single weekend to pass the Technician written.

You morsepersons need to get a common story. The rabid morsemen keep saying it is all "memorization," taking no skill whatsoever.

>This will let you get your feet wet in the VHF/UHF and higher frequencies.
>There's quite a lot that can be done in this area if you invest in the >equipment.

Come right out and say it...you morsepersons consider the frequency world above 30 MHz to be beneath you, a place for kids and lids (and probably space cadets) to go and PLAY.

>Again if you have some related background, the General written is not >particularly time consuming to study for either.

Everyone can just "memorize" the answers, right? :-)

>The code is only as hard >as you make it by fighting yourself. If you decide that you will learn it, >the average person only needs about 30 hours to get to 5wpm, assuming that a

The ARRL VEC uses the "farnesworth" method which send at FIFTEEN words per minute...even though the FCC regulations have five.

Dee, you haven't addressed the subject of the existance of the manual morse code test itself. You (erroneously) think that it is "necessary," possibly because you had to take that test.

>Getting the General license gives you all modes and all bands and the >maximum power privileges. The only thing you do not get are some >subsections on some of the bands that are reserved for Extra licensees.
>Now the Extra test is quite a bit more difficult but is not required unless >you want to get into those subsections mentioned above.

Extra class are the "elite." Having an extra license allows all the preening and self-righteous attitudes possible in a hobby activity. It is personally rewarding to elitist-wannabes who have to be "better than ordinary persons."

> You spoke of "learning as you go". Basically ham radio is the same. Even the Extra class license has only scratched the surface of all that might be involved in amateur radio.

Really? All those extras in here seem to think they are FAR better than any professionals in radio...because they had to test for morsemanship.

> The tests & licensing are to insure that you know enough not to get hurt, not to cause harm to other people, and not to make a mess on the bands. Also they are to insure that you have a grounding in the basics so you don't go spinning your wheels trying to get things working.

Golleee! All along I thought the FCC just regulated (and mitigated interference) in ALL US civil radio. Their predecessor agencies (before 1934) used Licensing and Testing for same as a REGULATORY tool. I didn't know that those were also academic tests and diplomas...

> You might ask why this is important.

Why IS morsemanship so important?

> Let's just address the safety area for a moment.

FCC amateur radio regulations cover only the radiated RF power field. As a safety issue for ALL affected by that RF field. Does YOUR station obey the federal regulations?

> Well for example, you can actually get a burn from grabbing an antenna that is being used to transmit.

Why would anyone do that? [anything in official rules on that?]

> If you get into microwave transmissions, you could fry your eyes (or somebody else's) if you look into the end of a wave guide while it's being used to transmit.

Why would anyone do that? You can get far worse damage to the eyes looking into a laser beam of much less power...and you don't need any license for that.

> You can get electrical shocks from feedback due to a poorly set up station. This is just a small sample of some of the things that you should be familiar with.

Those aren't covered in FCC regulations, are they?

"Feedback gives one shocks?" I suppose...I've made feedback networks for years and never been "electrically shocked" by them. Delighted and surprised that they worked so well, perhaps, but never got any electrical shocks from feedback.
I guess I'm just not "amateur" enough...hi hi :-)

>Let me digress into another of your questions: i.e. What is SSB?
>Fifty years ago ham radio, and still today the AM broadcast band, transmitted three components to put a signal on the air. First, was the carrier that set the dial frequency e.g. 3950 KHz. The carrier contains NO information, it just sets the dial frequency. Then voice audio was added to the carrier. This addition [modulation] produced two audio signals around the carrier. One above the carrier, the other below the carrier. So, the resulting signal had the carrier and one upper side band and one lower sideband. The carrier contained 2X the power of the audio. And the audio was redundant with 1/2 the audio power in each sideband. The resulting signal can be described as Double Sideband Plus Carrier.
>In the 50s and early 60s design techniques were incorporated to suppress the carrier, which contained NO information; and to eliminate one of the redundant sidebands. The resulting signal is Single Sideband [one audio channel] with suppressed carrier. [SSB = Single Side Band]

"Dave," your knowledge of Single Sideband is ferklempt.

The spectra of an amplitude modulated signal was mathematically described by John R. Carson of AT&T before the 1920s. SSB, including suppressed carrier, was USED by the telephone infrastructure in the 1920s for long-distance lines. The most common system, "C Carrier," had four separate 3 KHz voice channels and would operate on the open-wire telephone lines then common all over the world. This "C Carrier" was directly adapted to HF radio in the early 1930s, the frequency-multiplexed total signal converted to HF and amplified. The first HF SSB radio link was put into service between the Netherlands and the Netherlands Antilles carrying four voice channels or (to become the later commercial-military standard of two voice and six to eight TTY channels). While single-channel SSB was experimented with before WW2, it didn't expand until after WW2 and a number of US military contracts awarded to then-prominent radio makers (Collins, RCA as two examples). Based on that success, the amateurs took it up in the 1950s while the ARRL promoted the false idea that "SSB was pioneered by radio amateurs."

Technically, your statement was faulty. Each "sideband" (the spectra adjacent to the carrier) carries ONE QUARTER of the total RF power output of single-channel SSB, not "half" in normal AM. In normal AM the carrier is always constant in amplitude. In normal AM receivers the "detector" stage is a mixer, combining the carrier with the two sideband spectra with the output lowpass filtered to yield the original audio signal. Single-channel SSB usually suppresses the carrier (almost to extinction) and the "detector" stage being fed an equivalent constant-amplitude carrier signal from an internal receiver oscillator. The mix products of carrier re-insertion and the input single sideband spectra yield the original audio modulation after lowpass filtering.

The important thing about single-channel SSB is that a transmitter peak power output of RF need only be one-half to on-quarter of a conventional AM transmitter to yield the same demodulated audio signal level.

No morsemanship skill is necessary to use a single-channel SSB radio. Today it is being used on the open sea by both commercial and private boat/ship owners for voice communications; also data, separate or multiplexed, for written communications.

At this stage of his fraudulent claims, without ever having presented ANY third-party references or documents or even personal photographs, he is caught up in his own conundrum.

If Robeson comes clean and ever shows any documentation now, he is in for tons of remarks of his past claims that he can never weasel out of, not even with the gratuitous personal insults he normally uses against challengers.

If Robeson continues on his fraudulent claims, then he is only repeating his present behavior, convincing no one, and building only his own warped fantasy. The rest of us will be stuck with his personal blog output.

The duties of the Tennessee STATE Guard (not affiliated with the National Guard) were described by them as a sort of in-Tennessee 'custodian' of NG facilities if and only if the NG there is activated into federal service plus being a sort-of 'military police' for that state. As quasi-MPs they would have some ability to access federal records to confirm Robeson's military service. On the other hand, the TN STATE Guard will (by their own statements) accept membership by civilians.

The morsemen have been so brainwashed into believing their own efficacy in radio that it is impossible to "win" anything, certainly not with the ARRL publishing house constantly implying that morsemanship is the "best" skill an amateur could have.
Amateur morsemen are so wrapped up in their personal skill that they are unable to come to terms with any amateur or professional radio person who doesn't care for it. To them, US amateur radio is ALL ABOUT manual radiotelegraphy. Tsk.

This is a major problem at RS and what I want I can't you can't get it at Wally World.

 When I go to RS, I am usually looking for something like a BNC connector, or some 3.7 Kohm resistors or somesuch thing.
Most of the time the employees are nice, but they don't have a clue about what I'm asking for.
 Those little drawers of parts in the back aisle are usually picked over and half empty.
The RS employee will then look up the part you want ($2.49 for two 1/4 Watt resistors plus $8.95 special shipping, over ten dollars for what used to be a 49cent part and you have to wait days to get it.

>> RadioShack uses e-mail to fire employees

This is cold and Major NOT NICE! This lack of caring, of correct behavior is what has driven RS down.

You don't want to earn radio "preledges" Mark. You're too lazy to put forth an effort to earn them.

The CAP has a JAG? I think robesin just likes to collect suits.

I'm going to have to find an organization chart and locate the JAG's office.

Sgt York-Robesin and Chesty Puller-Robesin. And probably Sgt Schultz-Robesin from Hogan's Heroes, and Corporal Agarn-Robesin from F-Troop.

Then there's Walter Mitty-Robesin from fiction.

He knows everything. But he'll never get the call.

He taught the 911 Ops that there's a dash between the digits, i.e., 9-1-1, and they can't find the dash on th{i]er dialpads, even in reverse.

Queezay and Ooooday had a rape room. Don't know if Saddam participated.

Perhaps if robesin had been captured on one of his seven hostile forays behind enemy lines, we might have known the truth about Saddam.

It's not the Gay 90's anymore.  But maybe before the 1st decade of the new millenium lets out, we'll have a decision from the FCC.

The sad thing is, even if he were to finally tell the truth no one would believe him.

And so, robesin can never come clean.  He will go to his grave with lies heaped up, pushing up the daisies.

We know better.  We are stuck with nothing, the nothing that is robesin.

So they would be free to raid the armory? Yikes!

I pity anyone under that flight path. They don't know the danger they might be in.

And the CAP and American Taxpayers are liable.

I'm sure that that amateur radio dealer became aware of robesin's remarks.

   I was jesting on the "JAG" part. :-)   Robeson-Robesin has been on such a jag trying to impress folks (as a fraud) that his posts have enough material for at least two seasons of "JAG - a personal story."

Thank you, Rick! You spoke volumes of reality in this new millennium.

"Slow Code" is a relic of the 1930s, mentally over 70 years in the past.

Not everybody "recycles" it like you do, Markie. Does drinking that Oops! I missed it. My old three-layered killfile system (i.e. using Nfilter(NewsProxy), Xnews, & Hamster) :-) was getting so large and complicated some months ago, with so many obsolete entries etc., I cleaned house and started from scratch.

But the first entries in my new killfile are the stalkers, spammers, and the like: most of which are angry Anti-Christ Liberal "democrats", but, apparently, one of which is an angry Anti-Christ something else...

But if it really does vote Republican (only our N.S.A. & God & the psychic detectives, et al, and it [itself], know for sure -- I skip-traced it this morning, and I'm convinced it probably does), then I don't care if it believes in the tooth fairy, of if it believes in the "men-to-the-moon" fairy tale, as long as it votes Republican in all cases (J. Lieberman is a conspicuous exception to the otherwise steadfast rule, who will be re-elected with the HELP of Republicans). :-)

Enjoy!

Dee, the "rules that govern amateur radio" are the ENTIRETY of Title 47 C.F.R. I don't care that the ARRL pushes ONLY Part 97. Part 1 has plenty about amateur radio as well as a few other Parts. Look it up. It's free at the US Government Printing Office website.

>The section

The "objectives" of the FCC are to regulate and mitigate ALL civil radio in the USA, Dee. That's what the Communications Act of 1934 and the Telecommunications Act of 1996 chartered them to do (plus quite a bit on wireline comms...which don't apply to amateur radio).

The "Basis and Purpose" has a lot of POLITICAL boilerplate
in it, just like most of the other Parts for other radio SERVICES. Get real.

> They want people knowledgeable in ham radio and who are

The FCC is mainly interested in all radio services' users
FOLLOWING THE REGULATIONS, Dee. That's their job. The

THE REGULATIONS.

"George," you've got a whole bunch in this forum who think that amateur radio is some kind of veddy formal "JOB" with absolutes on THE WAY THEY DO IT. It's almost draconian in the insistence of "correct proceedure." No one will get fired from that "job" if they don't use "correct" ways but the way they blabber on you'd think they were "supervisors."

Horsepuckey. Dee, "George" is talking about GETTING INTO amateur radio. Don't give us this olde-tymer morseperson
"I've operated all the modes there are" stuff. Dee, I've operated lots more modes on radio than YOU are allowed to
as an amateur.

Manual morse code ability IS an ARCHAIC mode of communications
Dee. ALL the other US radio services have either dropped it for comms or never bothered with it in the first place. ALL.
The ARRL and the olde-tyme morsepersons insist that the manual
morse test "MUST" remain to "show something" about commitment and dedication. To WHOM, Dee? To YOU? To da Hams in da hood?

>Notice
>that the majority of people advocating ditching requirements are those who >have not yet passed those requirements, regardless of their age.

Dee, before you get to the downright-bitchy stage, may I remind you that some of us professionals in radio and electronics NEVER BOTHERED WITH AN AMATEUR RADIO TEST? I got my First 'Phone

in 1956. Considerably more testing involved than a ham license test then. Could YOU get a GROL now? Could YOU get a job working with radio hardware?

>Note that >the majority of people advocating keeping the requirements have passed them >and have experience in amateur radio again regardless of their age.

Yes, nine-year-old Extras possess the maturity and wisdom of the ages, all through having taken that morse test and gotten that magic certificate (suitable for framing).

>As far as "busy people" go, again refer to the basis and purpose as given in >the rules. The government is not concerned about your choice of how you use

Dee, you are LECTURING again. [just how long have you been in ANY radio?]

Dee, go look at some 1990 documents on the creation of the no-code-test Technician license. There's a copy available for free download on the NCI website. Over 16 years ago the FCC said outright that it didn't think the manual morse code test suited their purpose in granting an amateur radio license.
The FCC said the same thing in last year's NPRM.

I DO have to remind you that the FCC's only job is to REGULATE all civil radio in the USA. Their only task is to do that and mitigate matters of interference with other radio services (plus wireline but that's not concerning amateurs). Theirs is not to brainwash hams...that's the ARRL's task.

>> Can you give me valid reasons as to what useful purpose in today's age

[stand by for the LITANY from the Church of St. Hiram]

>Every piece of knowledge has its uses. The difficult part is winnowing >through it and decide what should be tested and what should not.

Ahem, to olde-tyme morsepersons, manual morse code skill MUST be tested for any radio privileges below 30 MHz. That's engraved in everlasting marble and protected by nuclear-blast armor plate.

>Here's why I think code should still be tested:
>1. It is still one of the basic building blocks of ham radio.

Horsepucky. It was only the first mode used...had to be in the primitive-technology of early radio using "spark."

Spark is outlawed now, Dee.

> For example, one of the "hot" digital modes is PSK31. The developer drew upon personal experience and incorporated features derived from that mode to make a robust digital mode.

More sinning-by-omission, Dee. Peter Martinez, G3PLX, innovated PSK31. Using the available Information Theory rules he knew about, derived from commercial and military technology. It was field-tested for years in Europe by many amateurs there before it got any publicity over here. "Hot" is over a decade OLD, Dee. In 1974 Peter was doing great things with polyphase networks for voice SSB...it was written up in RSGB's membership magazine. I doubt the ARRL bothered with publicizing it.

> 2. Because it is not "book learning", too many people will avoid it since it is different than the type of learning they are accustomed to. They will falsely think it is hard when in reality it is different. Requiring them to learn it gets them over that resistance hump.

So...morsemanship really IS a barrier. You admit it.

> 3. Each and every mode has its strong points and weak points. Each of us that participate in ham radio should attempt to gain personal experience in those modes so that we know by that personal experience what those strengths and weaknesses are.

Oh my, there we go on the lecture circuit again.

Dee, I started out working as an Illustrator. That's an artist who draws/paints things as they really are. I have an aptitude for that. It is as natural to me to draw, fairly well I might add, as a physically-endowed athlete is to sports or another with a musical aptitude is to playing an instrument. The ability to "advance" in manual morse code skill is NOT a "natural" one but an aptitude in only a few of us. The US military even tested for that aptitude in all recruits of the 1940s and 1950s. [I got okay marks in that, by the way...:-)]

The first radio operators used manual morse code. First, it was fine for the primitive state of the art. Second, it was a mature mode in the wireline communications, a technology even more primitive than radio of that time. Telegraphers weren't taken off the street...they either had the aptitude or they didn't. Once "radio" got going, the telegraphers (downsized from wireline comms by those new-fangled teleprinter thingies) made much of their "abilities" using on-off-keying manual morse. The Morse Mythos was born and grew like wildfire. Good, good newsprint copy!

But, as time progressed there came NEW modes, much faster and more accurate, without need of morse specialists at each end of a circuit. The radio telegraphers were downsized. They retired and turned to amateur radio of pre-WW2 times. Morse was still king of the modes and ARRL (by the 1930s) was hailing the king as the "best" for all amateurs. None of this newfangled thing called "voice" for them although they did pay lip-service to it. By 1940 the ARRL was King of the membership organizations (through their publications) and they maintained that morsemanship was the epitome of amateur comms. They kept that up after WW2 and on into the single-channel SSB start in the 1950s...again paying lip-service to this newfangled SSB. And you know what? ARRL is STILL trying to promote morsemanship even if sinning-by omission once more.

Back before WRC-03 (that's over three years ago) the IARU took a position that the amateur radio license tests for morse ability was NOT mandatory...make it an option for each administration. Lots of folks went along with that, but NOT the ARRL. League was almost vehement in opposition. OK, the ITU-R amateur radio regulations were CHANGED, going along the lines of the IARU position. [that's the International Amateur Radio Union, Dee] Ah, but NOW the ARRL takes a neutral position, won't go either way...they just say that all amateurs must obey the law...but they lobbied last year to keep SOME manual morse testing for the under-30-MHz privileges. 92 years after being formed, the ARRL just can't give up and change to what OTHER folks want...

>If you are interested, I could construct various scenarios where mode X is >the best mode.

"X-Files" was cancelled, Dee. [cousin Gillian got a vacation]

Please, go on, Dee. I want to hear from your vast experience in radio and all your guru-like knowledge of what is "best" for radio amateurs. Especially WHY everyone has to emulate the olde-tyme amateur days, the ones before you were born.

Beep, beep,

Wow! It took you so long to say so little, Len!

Why not simply toss the "personal experience" gauntlet directly into her chops and challenge Dee to a battle of the electronic wits at sunrise? I'm sure it will do wonders for your machismo and, if it makes you feel that you succeeded in one-upmanshit, perhaps you can even send her to her corner, crying for mercy.
Go ahead, Len. Dazzle her with your brilliance and browbeat her if you can.
There...don't you feel better already? Was the relief good for you? Feel vindicated?

I think he meant that someone was going to fly over him and shit on him like a pigeon.
My favorite part is where Mark says "stroll for flame". Does that mean he is a prostitute that gets paid in insults?

Nope.  I'd only be interested in the ones he earned.  But that would just raise more questions about seven hostile actions.

With the tons and tons of sour grapes from these Morse Forever folks, no one has won anything.

Your rudeness is clearly expressed in your one word response [above].

A more appropriate response, carrying the same meaning, but suitable for an open list, would be 'bovine defacation'!

No wonder Ham Radio is going the way of CB with people who express themselves so poorly and are unwilling to work for something they value.

Where your treasure is ... there your heart is!

Dave, he can't help it, his education is "limited" and doesn't know any better - due to NO EFFORT - effort as he said was bull shit too. So you can't expect much out of someone who has apparently made effort - to do something.

Mork the dork - The man is right - IT IS AN INVESTMENT - OR shall we assume your radios were given to you by the welfare office, paid for by pan handling on the street, or some other way which YOU didn't have to pay for them? ALSO - to get involved in such a hobby - ANY hobby - YOU MAKE AN INVESTMENT in time and well - whatever to enjoy it. We won't go with effort since it too is bull shit.

Dave Said:

>I'll say it again ... INVESTMENT!!

Hi Dave,

Thanks for the replies, I surely didn't mean to get a flamewar going, but, it seems there are some very strong views on this.

I don't mind putting an investment into something...usually when I learn something new, I research and get into it 110%. The trouble with the requirements and all there that I see is, that it puts up a very high initial investment before you can actually get in and do anything with it. I guess I question, well how do I know it will be worth all the time invested before I even get to 'play'?

In my case, and I'm sure many others out there in this day in age, my TIME is what is of such short supply. I have no problem laying out cash for equipment...with most things I do, I generally jump in with both feet, buy equipment and 'learn as I go'. I'd like to do the same with ham and other radio technologies, but, in this case, I find a large wall in front of me of study and test taking, before I even get to jump on the air even once to see how much I'd like it.

Does that make sense to you?

Thanks for the replies,

noonespecial

I think I mentioned the kOOk potential in the radio groups in an earlier post. I think Slow Code may get a nomination in the near future, providing that he stays the course.

Hi Lloyd,

Thanks for the reply. Can you explain what SSB is to me, or post some informative links? I've seen ssb (single side band?) in the same breath/post as some CB radios. I'm not sure what it is, or what special equipment it takes. About all the info I can google points to radio communications at sea.

Can you use this on land? License and equipment requirements?

Thanks in advance for any info or pointers, I'm trying to learn about all this differences in publicly accessible radio.

Example.

A few months ago a group of ham radio operators went into the central Pacific Ocean to an island named Swain's Island [ATOLL]. Swain's Island had just been approved by the Ham radio Certificate Powers {American Radio relay League] as a separate DX [distance] entity and as such it qualifies as an entry into the various DX awards [DXCC being the prime award}. [DXCC means you have submitted written proof of confirmed contacts with other ham radio operators in 100 or more other countries [or entities].

The Hams operated from this rare location for about a week and then returned home. There is no-one there today!

Let me digress into another of your questions: i.e. What is SSB?

Fifty years ago ham radio, and still today the AM broadcast band, transmitted three components to put a signal on the air. First, was the carrier that set the dial frequency e.g. 3950 KHz. The carrier contains NO information, it just sets the dial frequency. Then voice audio was added to the carrier. This addition [modulation] produced two audio signals around the carrier. One above the carrier, the other below the carrier. So, the resulting signal had the carrier and one upper side band and one lower sideband. The carrier contained 2X the power of the audio. And the audio was redundant with 1/2 the audio power in each sideband. The resulting signal can be described as Double Sideband Plus Carrier.

In the 50s and early 60s design techniques were incorporated to suppress the carrier, which contained NO information; and to eliminate one of the redundant sidebands. The resulting signal is Single Sideband [one audio channel] with suppressed carrier. [SSB = Single Side Band]

I'd definitely go with the Uniden BCT15 for analog or the BCT996D (I think that's where they put the D - at the end) for digital. What he needs depends on the signals he wants. Go to <http://www.radioreference.com/modules.php?name=RR> and look around. If the mode for what he wants is D, he needs digital, otherwise an analog scanner will do. Both of them track trunked systems, so he can follow the DC PD (and FD) systems, and they cover all currently used frequencies.

You might ask that about anything. Given that <insert group here> like myself are stretched for time, what do all the requirements for <insert something here> do for anyone?

>I'm in a pretty technical field, and I study to keep up in that field everyday,

So don't. Buy a CB, FRS or GMRS radio and talk all you like. Those are the services created for folks who just want to talk on the radio.

>If less stringent requirements were there, I could >easily afford the tools of the trade, and would like to just jump in and start

You won't like that - you'll have to devote a lot of your precious time to learning things - electronics, both theoretical and practical, programming, reading a waterfall display, keeping your signal distortion-free ...

You can't just plug a radio into a computer and start using them.
Digital communications doesn't work if you do it that way.

>Can you give me valid reasons as to what useful purpose in today's age they serve?

No, since someone who wants instant gratification can't be bothered to listen to why that's the wrong way to do something. Your time is probably much to valuable to spend it learning enough to understand why you can't learn enough in an instant.

Go memorize some test answers, get a code-free tech, hook your computer up to your radio and, in 6 months, you'll have your radio up for sale on eBay, because "it doesn't really work".

Bummer.. well, there's a bunch of ways to test, flashing lights and other ways. If dyslexia is a problem, just have to get someone to read off the dit-dah sequences while you memorize them, or use a recorded audio lesson.
There's always a way!
gud luck,

A GMRS license costs money. A ham license costs study (time). Your choice. Either one lets you "talk on the radio".

Here's another:

""SOMALIA, THE BLACK HOLE OF ANARCHY

BY AHMED Q. BURSALIID

In mid July 2005 The U.S. intelligence agents, working with local warlords, have carried out counter terrorist operations to seize sus�pects. "Somalia remains the theatre for a shadowy confrontation involving local Ji�hadis, foreign Al Qaeda operatives and in�telligence services from a number of re�gional and Western countries," says a report by the International Crisis Group in 2005. The report says the "dirty war be�tween terrorists and counter-terrorist oper�atives in Mogadishu appears to have en�tered a new and more vicious stage that threatens to push the country further towards Jihadism and extremist violence un�less its root causes are properly addressed."

The Somali transitional federal government was formed in neighbouring Kenya in 2004 and moved into Somalia June 2005. However, the administration has failed to relocate to Mogadishu, the Somali capital, because the city was considered unsafe. Due to the insecurity of Mogadishu, the TFG relocated to Jawhar, which it later decided to move to Baidoa.

Warlords and leaders of Islamic courts have been fighting in Mogadishu for about five months. This led to the loss of hundreds of civilians and destruction of properties. Somalia, which had been in a state of anarchy for more than a decade, has once again gone to war; this war was somehow different from previous ones. The nature of this war is seen to have some religious and political clash while previous ones were much related to tribal and feudal conflicts. Each one of the conflicting parties is claiming that the other group is related to Al-Qaeda when the reality is somehow different from that. After months of armed conflicts within the capital city of Somalia, Union of Islamic Courts took the lead with enormous points by eliminating the warlords who took hostage the country and its people for 16 years.

United States of America, which earlier denied any allegation of helping or giving hand to the warlords in the fight to weed out the Islamic Militia in Somalia shortly after the takeover admitted that it had been supporting warlords to destabilise the Islamic militia. America has been an active player in the politics of Somalia, and until now its policy towards restoring peace and stability in the war -torn Somalia is somehow obscure.

Somalis believe that it is the right time to take advantage to restore the lost hope of good governance in the country as Union of Islamic Courts led by Sheikh Sharif imposed law and order on Mogadishu, which was seen neither for 16 years. Hundreds of families from overseas countries returned back to Mogadishu, the capital city of Somalia since the takeover took place.

At first Transitional Federal Government welcomed the political change, which took place in Mogadishu as the Union of Islamic Courts disarmed a pack of US-backed warlords that took the country and its people hostage for more than a decade. But soon after the Islamic Militia started to capture some other cities, the TFG warned the Union of Islamic Courts of capturing farther cities. A big gap of political misunderstanding came in between the Transitional Federal Government and the Union of Islamic Courts, after the president of fragile Transitional Federal Government requested peacekeeping forces from the African Union. As the new Somali constitution inked in Kenya says, "Peacekeeping forces should not come from the neighbouring countries (Ethiopia, Kenya and Djibouti)". Likewise, the parliament passed a motion, which it was requesting peacekeeping troops to Somalia without paying attention to the classification of peacekeeping forces from AU countries and of front line countries. This has created an escalation of political crisis in Somalia. Ethiopia, which is the common enemy of Somalia has sent its troops to Somalia in an attempt to protect the Transitional Federal Government.

This time, Arab League took the political platform of Somalia to mediate the two conflicting parties. TFG and UIC were invited to attend a mediation conference held on June 2006 in Sudan to settle their differences. After a reconciliation conference, presided over by Sudanese president Omar Hassan Albashir, the current chairman of Arab League, the reconciliation process derailed with unknown reasons but it is believed that Ethiopia was the main figure, which made the reconciliation process fail as the outcome of the meeting could not meet the criteria of Ethiopia's plan to Somalia and then, President Abdullahi Yusuf Ahmed, a well-known pro-Ethiopian warlord and his loyal prime minister Ali Mohamed Gedi, a vet scientist started to advocate the legality of Ethiopian Army presence in Somalia.

The Somalis are of the opinion that the involvement of Ethiopian Army in the peacekeeping operations in Somalia could cause havoc and deterioration of the political condition of the country in any case as Ethiopia is an old aged enemy of Somalia in East Africa. While a vast majority of the Somali public strongly opposed to deployment of Ethiopian troop into Somalia under any pretext, president Yusuf's political stance towards the deployment of Ethiopian troops in Somalia is clear and also in action by denying the presence of Ethiopian troops in Somalia just to protect his presidential seat.

Since the reconciliation conference in Sudan derailed a number of ministers resigned due to the political misunderstanding between TFG and UIC. Prime minister declared that he would be nominating successors of the resigned 24 ministers. In addition to that, the prime minister himself survived after the Somali parliament passed a motion of no confidence against him recently.

Moreover, Prime minister of Ethiopia Milez zanawi whose government earlier denied any presence of Ethiopian troops in Somalia told BBC that his government has sent troops to Somalia to protect the Transitional Federal Government from the Union of Islamic Courts. While on the other hand, Eritrea is also believed to be an active supporter for the Union of Islamic Courts. Somalis believe that the support from both Ethiopia and Eritrea respectively is much related to a proxy war in between them.
US government warned Ethiopia and Eritrea stop the proxy war they are playing in the Somali territory.

then there is the problem of getting the VE to even discuss acomdation where I lived before they would not speak to me with a Doctor (md) dispite the fact the PHD's and MSW tend to dianose Dyslexia, then they want seris of test result and your medical records truned over the the ARRL all fo them for evaluation by NON medial people  indeed we saw last year our own Steve Robeson making fun of the facts I was looking for the min osrt of testing that an MD could prescribe to dianose dyslexia

he has tormented me ever since for daring to try accomation there indeed was a way but I was too honest to take since I got to the point where in some sessions I could sending, other session receiving, it was offered long ago when I was first trying that someone would simply scamble 2 session together and say I passed them both on the same day instead of 2 weeks apart as was realy case (btw getting to the stage where passing iether way was 1 in 4 coccourance took 4 years working 35 minute 5 day per week, and suffering through spliting headaches. It might be possible now but it aint worth it the FCC will act soon enough

It's a mode, like CW or FM. It's actually AM, with the carrier and one sideband chopped off (or never generated). No whistles, the same transmitter can handle more power, it punches through noise and interference better and, if you have a quadrature detector (sorry, Usenet isn't large enough to explain that in a post - you'll have to learn a little engineering), it's almost as good, for getting through, as digital or CW.

You can use it anywhere you can use AM (as far as ham and CB frequencies are concerned, anyway). Same license as any AM voice mode for the frequency. SSB transmitter. Receiver has to at least have a beat oscillator (BFO), but a SSB receiver is better.

The choice is a bit more than local/mail order.  You should really compare the 96/396 or 2096/996 feature by feature to see which one best suits your needs.

The "Ham radio Certificate Powers"?

Really? The people who live there just up and left?

The carrier is just there for setting a dial frequency? How about if one just transmitted ONE component, the carrier and then turned it on and off and regular intervals. It might be possible to use the on/off pulses to convey information, huh?

Those "design techniques" were used as early as about 1927.

Where is all this going?

The time investment is not as much as it seems. That is even more true of someone who has experience in related fields or has experience in the art of studying. For those with some existing experience in related fields, they can often read up enough in a single weekend to pass the Technician written. This will let you get your feet wet in the VHF/UHF and higher frequencies. There's quite a lot that can be done in this area if you invest in the equipment.

Again if you have some related background, the General written is not particularly time consuming to study for either. The code is only as hard as you make it by fighting yourself. If you decide that you will learn it, the average person only needs about 30 hours to get to 5wpm, assuming that a good training method is used.

Getting the General license gives you all modes and all bands and the maximum power privileges. The only thing you do not get are some subsections on some of the bands that are reserved for Extra licensees.

Now the Extra test is quite a bit more difficult but is not required unless you want to get into those subsections mentioned above.

You spoke of "learning as you go". Basically ham radio is the same. Even the Extra class license has only scratched the surface of all that might be involved in amateur radio. The tests & licensing are to insure that you know enough not to get hurt, not to cause harm to other people, and not to make a mess on the bands. Also they are to insure that you have a grounding in the basics so you don't go spinning your wheels trying to get things working.

You might ask why this is important. Let's just address the safety area for a moment. Well for example, you can actually get a burn from grabbing an antenna that is being used to transmit. If you get into microwave transmissions, you could fry your eyes (or somebody else's) if you look into the end of a wave guide while it's being used to transmit. You can get electrical shocks from feedback due to a poorly set up station. This is just a small sample of some of the things that you should be familiar with.

the investment s not the same for different folks it can't be so the e;lcetircal engineer less of a ham for making a lessor investment?
that is the clear inplacation indeed you have implied that My Wife is a more cabble member of the Tech the class because she had to wrok MUCH harder than me to get that

This is some of the very information that you will learn in studying for a license but here's the nickel tour.

An AM signal (like the radio stations use) has a center carrier frequency. This is modulated by the information (voice, music, etc). The result of this modulation is that two sidebands develop that are identical but are mirrored about the carrier frequency. All the information is carried in the side bands and both sidebands carry the same information. So the smart boys got to thinking and asked why do they actually need to transmit both sidebands (since they contain the same information) and why do they need to transmit the center carrier (which contains no information). They developed a way to eliminate the carrier and one of the side bands on the transmit end and a method to receive and convert it to useful sound at the receive end. This is called (ta-dah) Single Side Band. The main advantage of SSB over AM is that the transmitted signal is much narrower so more stations can fit in the same band width. An additional benefit is that because the signal is narrower, you can use a narrower filter and so reduce the amount of background noise receive with the signal. Since the carrier and one side band are eliminated before the signal power is boosted for transmission, you also end up with a stronger signal because the power is, in essence, focused on boosting a much narrower signal. For example, my radio gives me 100 watts out on SSB but only 25 watts out on AM.

Amateur radio operators use SSB as the commonest voice mode on HF (shortwave communications). Some hobbyists do use AM from time to time partly because they enjoy it and partly because of its historical significance. There is also SSB activity (as well as some AM) in the VHF and higher frequencies. Basically, in the amateur bands, it is legal anywhere that voice communications are legal. However in VHF and higher frequencies, there are band plans that one should follow on where to use SSB.

As far as equipment goes, you've got to read the specs. Some CBs (an unlicensed radio service) have SSB as well as AM. For amateur radio (a licensed service) HF voice transceivers, SSB is normally the standard mode with AM being an option that is available in most radios.

I suggest that everyone that the AUKk00ks have been chasing (yes, group mission k00k posters are real, Alice) join me in alt.usenet.kooks and help me trash the place.  WE can have our own elections, chase the k00ks that are chasing kooks around, watch them try and avoid our rocking chairs with their tails, it will be entertaining.

DX simply means distance. If you are talking about HF transmissions, it normally refers to countries outside your own. If you are talking about VHF and higher, it can be within your own country but at distances beyond line of site communications.

The "DX community" is simply a term that refers collectively to those who are particularly interested and involved in the longer distance radio contacts.

I would like to add that DXing isn't limited to chasing awards. Some people just like to find someone in a foreign country to ragchew with. One day I was lucky enough to come across a gentleman in Italy who simply wanted to talk not run a pileup. We spent about 1/2 an hour just chatting.

Sorry... my bad... is it 35 now? I stand corrected.

Back to the chant...

If you can't do 35wpm, you should stay off the bands!!
Seriously people, think about it... do you want blood on your hands because you're a slow-beepin loser?
Lives are on the line, in case you aren't paying attention.

This is serious business and requires a dedication as if it were... your only purpose.

Unmotivated 25wpm losers need not apply.

Hey... you have proof I was dropped?? I've wondered for years as I just can't remember the day I was born at all.
It kinda annoys me, but hey, I can't remember CW either, so I figure no loss either way.

Not to stray off-topic or break any rules, but you wouldn't happen to have a

For Sale:

G.E. ER-106A VHF High-Band monitor receivers (not scanners). These receivers are currently operating in the 173 mHz portion of the band. These are the units that look like MVP radios.

They are very clean, have decent sensitivity, and nice audio. 120 VAC operation only. I have 4 of these. $25.00 each + shipping from 93240.

Please respond to: sx43ster at gmail dot com

Thanks

Huh? How can a fast CW op not save a life? Have you read this thread at all?
CW = Gift of Life.
Fast CW = Hand of God.

It's in the Extra Class manual....

AAAAAAAAAAARRRRRRRRRRRRGGGGGGGH!!
Holy crap.... I hope no one else reads that.. It'll kill the entire Comm-Post pile we're making, and then people will just go back to swapping radios or something. [Perish the thought!]

The one that's looking for a VHF 50w Spectra..... hehe...

And I have to ask Dave, [and I mean seriously this time]... You really aren't defending this thread [in this group] as an intelligent discussion [or one that should even be here] in the first place, are you?

LOL.. Now that's what I'm looking for! What else ya got? Let's post each reply twice from now on, OK?

In other news....

Stay on topic Dave.... the issue is CW saves lives,[or results in other holistic happenings] ok?

I swear I've already explained that to ya...?

We've proven many posts ago that brain cells have nothing to do with ham radio, this thread or those in it.
My fav site, www.hamsexy.com will explain it all.

Do you listen to amateur radio repeaters on your scanner?   Yes?

Well talk to Mark. He can tell you how to become a no code Tech. He is an expert at that because he's been a no code tech forever.

Are any of the scanner manufacturers making receivers which accommodate the new "narrow" bandwidth? The compliance date for domestic spectrum users is January 1, 2008.*   When the new plan comes into effect, the max deviation will then be 2.5 kHz, instead of the current 5.0 kHz.

* The new format does not apply to low-band, hams, aviation band, or 800 mHz (yet).

Funny thing... the stupid NASA Engineers tried to control the thing with data bursts.... Yes, data bursts!
Can you believe those anti-CW nazis? We'd already be on Pluto if they'd controlled it with CW.
So, sadly, no.... due to advanced technology, she's been lost....

Was it that late? I would've guess more around the late/end of the war...

Well anyway, I was just trying to stir up some jarheads with the beaches/Army thing...

You wanna swap radios or anything?

You are indeed correct in the first instance, whereas in the latter, it would depend upon which side of the pond one resides.

Got any radios for sale/trade?

LOL... good catch..

But again, maybe he was a priest presiding over the last ash Wednesday service and ashed the gays then?

It still leaves me wondering if either of them had a radio for trade...?

Which Baal? There's like 50 clones running around....
None of which seem to be interested in trading radios....

Sweet Jesus!! Man, are you crazy??? Do you know how many hammies are gonna see that and what kind of search and rescue operation you've started....
Now lives will be lost and thousands of dollars wasted because of that little trick.
I hope you're proud of yourself.

Actually, in all seriousness... my advice is to never put a d-cell maglight in your front pocket on a 3am call.....

No good can come from it.

The Pro-96 has been around for a while, any rumors out there about new scanners from GRE/RadioShack?

looking mainly for digital scanners, needed to hear local PD/FD....

You do realize I'm a disgruntled radio swap group, off-topic, post bombing loser, right?
I'm just thinking this would be a great place for a radio swap group, that's all.
Everything I say is usually in sarcasm.....just to add stupidity to the stupidty....
I've given up though and I'm going back to ebay...

Big Ol' Kudos to you bro. Somalians suck. I think there are indeed places that qualify as Fourth-world countries.
Somalia, Nigeria, etc... LOL..

Good on ya then! Do upgrade whenever you can, coz hammin' can be fun if you can find a decent bunch to hang with.
Learning 5wpm is pretty easy and gives you a new "toy" or "language" to play with if you are so inclined.
The big plus being the new privileges and theory, and all the hi-tech progression in radio going on in the 21st Century!
There's lots to get into.
Gud luck,
rb

Alright.  List your stuff.  Maybe someone is interested.

It sucked.

Just got a message on the somalia reflector today.  Seems the al qaida is well liked in somalia because the country has been through 15 years of chaos and lawlessness, and the islamists are now imposing their law.
 I guess any law is better than none.

Reminds me, in part, how hitler came to power.

Well, at the moment my radio is on 3729 LSB. But it will shortly be on 3652 CW.

Nope.  It's not about antennas, so that makes it off topic in the group I'm posting in.

It's speculated that GRE probably won't release a new model until some rebanded systems are online. Erring on the side of caution, I suppose.

In the meantime, the PRO-96/2096 works quite well unless you need to track 700MHz trunked or LTR systems. In that case, the newer Uniden scanners (396/996) should work for you.

All of the above should be able to be modified to work after rebanding takes place, but nothing is 100% certain. Hence, it may be wise indeed for GRE to wait.

FS: Pro 2006 400 Channel Base scanner. No gaps in coverage (25-1300 MHz) A bargain at $125.

Common questions:
Yes, the backlight is bright

Yes, it receives cell phone signals
No other modifications have been perfomed.
No, I don't have the box.

If you'll check the address bar when you reply, you might notice that you're posting in a swap group, scanner group, policy group, and antenna group....
IOW, you're just as guilty as the rest of us. :-)

Who's gonna see a single want ad in 300 postings about nothing?
Who wants to pilfer 300 postings about nothing to find a sale ad?
On the Somalia thing,
Do you mean extremists/terrorists that claim to follow Islam, or just basic Islamists?
It looks like you mean the former.

Please understand that Al Qaeda is a group of terrorists/extremists, it doesn't matter what religion they claim to follow.

All you have to do (if you've got about 8 hours to spare) is go through Google archives since before they bought it from DejaNews several years ago. "Robitussin" has thousands of postings in the same venal manner he continues to use... especially his self-promotion as heroic USMC veteran which he has never, ever proved through any third-party references, digitized documents, or much of anything else other than his own AOL home page and self-description on QRZ.

He is clearly into his own fantasy of imagined superpowers without the aid of Stan Lee.

"Sidetracked?!?" :-)

I put this message into the Captain ARRL Superpower Decryption machine and the machine broke down.

Last I looked (which was yesterday) there were NO Public Safety radio services which used "CW" for either "life-saving" or distress calls. The USCG doesn't monitor the OLD 500 KHz international maritime distress and safety frequency any more. International Civil Aviation Organization long ago stopped any need for carrying "CW"-proficient air crew on over-ocean flights.

This "vital need" of maintaining a "pool of trained (morsemen) operators" in the mighty amateur radio (militia?) ranks is a wigment of olde-tyme morsemen's imagination.

In truth, I haven't checked out the Civil Air Patrol. Maybe they have some kind of "need" for morsemen even though they use 121.5 MHz for emergencies just like all the CIVIL airways do. [transponder squawk to 77 or 7700 if that is installed; 243 MHz if a REAL military aircraft]

We'll have to see what the "pilot in command" of a TN CAP two-seater has to say on that...if he isn't "busy" with his "life-saving air patrols." :-)

I know Uniden is - the 396, 330, 15 and 996 - maybe some others.

Well, let me ask, from the point of view of a potential noob to the hobby. What use is the code requirements?
I can't really see in today's era, the need for them? I've been surfing around looking at ham and talking to an old friend that had a license and it look interesting to me.

But, given that many professional people like myself are stretched for time, what good does all the licensing and code requirements do for you besides build up boundries to doing something new and fun?

I'm in a pretty technical field, and I study to keep up in that field everyday, the last thing I want to do, is have to spend my weekends studying to talk on a radio. If less stringent requirements were there, I could easily afford the tools of the trade, and would like to just jump in and start working with a ham setup. I'm particularly interested in exploring the amateur radio/computer connections.

I have no problem informally looking up information and learning on my own (heck, that's what I'm doing in the USENET group to begin with)...but, I just don't have the time for archaic rules, regulations and codes that as far as I can see...really serve no real purpose but, to keep out busy people that might like to participate.

Can you give me valid reasons as to what useful purpose in today's age they serve?

Thank you,

noonespecial

The 'use' is something you just can't understand. The 'use' is a commitment of time and talent which adds value to the license. The 'use' is investment.

Can of worms topic, I'm sure. To avoid the "how long is a piece of string" nature of this question, I'll give some particulars.

I'm looking to buy a good basic police/EMS scanner for my father, a retired police dispatcher, to get back into the hobby (he hasn't actively listened in a few years). The scanner he has now, an old basic Uniden model, evidently can no longer handle the frequencies the LEA has switched to (he's tried to program them to no avail, I'm assuming it's just because of a shift in mhz to higher bands).

He lives in a suburb of Washington DC so anything with good range that could get his local city/county frequencies and those of nearby (within a five to ten mile radius, max) would be great, as would any public government/military frequencies he might be in the range of. External antennas are definitely an option, as he's got a roof-mounted dinosaur he used to use for CB radio as well (going to try to get him back into that as well).

He's getting "on in age," as they say, and his eyesight is now quite poor, so anything with a larger, well-lit display would be a definite plus, but it's not a deal killer as I'd probably be programming it for him and I don't know that he'd need to see the frequency display to know the channels after a while (and honestly, I don't know that there'd be a scanner unit with numbers large enough for him to read).

I'm so inexperienced with this subject that I wouldn't even know how to approach the topic of pricing. I guess we're looking for a "solid, middle of the line table-top model," but don't need a lot of complex bells and whistles he'd have to manage through an array of tiny (and therefore pretty much invisible to him) switches and dials. I'm really looking for the good old-fashioned "fire and forget" setup approach, if such a thing is even still possible. I do see him at least once a week, so occasional tweaking, if necessary, would definitely be fine.

I realize this is a bit of a broad question, and I'll thank everyone in advance for the patience and their replies. With his fading eyesight, he's gotten a bit "down at the mouth," and this is one hobby he used to enjoy that he could still do given his current circumstances, and I'm just sort of looking around trying to find something to get him involved and interested in again that may lift his spirits.

Thanks again--I look forward to your replies. Feel free to reply also to my email address: kriskane (at) gmail (dot com).

   In other words, you just can't come up with a valid reason other than some emotional-traditional one, can you?

   What is the return on that "investment?"  Being good enough to do 1930s radio operating?  In a diversified HOBBY?

   What you really seem to be saying is that "everyone has to do it because you did it...so there, nyah, nyah..."     :-)

> Balance of original post has been REDACTED.

   You have been redacted.

   You have been rejected.

   You have been inducted.

   Here's a news flash:  The job of the FCC (the agency that grants amateur radio licenses...and hundreds of others...) is to regulate and mitigate all USA civil radio.  It does not tailor ham tests to some nebulous "tradition" of the Archaic Radiotelegraphy Society (ARS).  I.E., it has no reason to demand anyone take a manual morse code test except under the lobbying by the ARRL.

   If you want to "preserve" the ARS as requiring morsemanship for all privileges below 30 MHz, then you need to make up a Petition and submit it to the FCC.  You can even ask them to RENAME the ARS to Archaic Radiotelegraphy Society.  The FCC allows such petitioning.  They even explain how to do it on their website.

   Tell the FCC that you insist on maintaining 1930s standards of radio communication well beyond 2030 by keeping that morse code test forever and ever.  The ARRL will love you for it.  Go for it!

Motivating hams to be better hams is a good thing.

For example, if you were going to lose your internet if you didn't learn how to type and spell after a year, I'm sure you'd be learning how to type and spell. But since there is no requirement that you have to type and spell properly after a year, you continue on murdering the english language.

There's some real gems in there.

Lawsuits. Robeson sues people, or at least he says he does. In his last lawsuit, he got an Upper Peninsula attorney gratis, then made comments on who his free attorney's wife might be sleeping with. Meanwhile, the person he is suing has yet to be served.

"Bricks through windows, slashed tires, terrorized wives." These are bad things that happen to people who shoot their mouths off, as some people have been told they do. Mind you, Robesin isn't the one throwing bricks, slashing tires, or terrorizing wives. "Other people" do this sort of stuff.

"Dialing..." On Robesin's personal authority as a male nurse and failed Marine, he can make a phone call anywhere in the USA and have you picked up on his say so. Really.

"PUTZ, Putz, putz" Disagree with Robesin and you are a penis with a yiddish accent.

"PEDOPHILE, Pedophile, pedophile" If you disagree with Robesin and you give of your time to a youth group, you are a pervert.

"HOMO, Homo, homo" Disagree with Robesin and you are queer, with lots and lots of inuendo.

Robesin is a national hero, taking part in seven hostile actions as a Marine. Yet, his only overseas assignment is Okinawa. Never been injured, but discharged after only 18 years. Says he's retired. Says he's disabled. Says it's not medical. Says he has been rehabilitated by the VA. "Ask the VA."

Robesin got back into uniform as a Tennessee State Guard "officer" of some kind. Very short lived career.

Robesin got back into uniform as a Civil Air Patrol (CAP) "officer" of some kind. Says he's a Major now. Photo of him in a sage green (not blue) flight suit on his QRZ website. As far as I know, most CAP volunteers are involved in training youth/Cadets. Hmmmm?

Robesin got a vanity call, K4CAP, while in the CAP. The CAP HQ is at Maxwell AFB in Montgomery, Alabama. Then he gave it up. Look where his old call now resides.

Robesin got back into uniform as a male nurse. Says he doesn't wear the white dress uniform. Probably just regular pants and a v-neck lavendar colo[u]red top.

Robesin has military medals. He has lots of medals. Many of those medals he didn't earn.

Robesin used to be an ASSISTANT NCOIC of NMC MARS on Okinawa. Doesn't know the first thing about it. Doesn't know what a MOD is.

"MARS >>>IS<<< Amateur Radio" according to Robesin Yup, you heard it here first.

A well know amateur radio outlet had the owners daughter's photo featured in a prominent amateur radio publication. Robesin said she was selling "Something" but it wasn't radios. He's a swell guy.

Robesin can make comments all day long about how your children won't respect you. His child died from severe birth defects and he knows that no one will make comments about his children. He's a swell guy.

Robesin needs to talk to the wives. He needs to talk to Len's wife. He needs to talk to my wife. He needs to talk to Mark's wife. He wants to talk to them on the phone or in person. He wants to mail them. He wants to knock on my door to talk to my wife and posts partial addresses so you know to expect a visit. Now he makes jokes about Len and Mark's wife. He's a swell guy.

I could go on, but I don't have 8 hours as Len suggests...

So what's the real beef??? I disagreed with Robesin. He doesn't like the way I think.

So what's the real, Real beef? I don't think the Morse Code exam should be retained for an HF license in amateur radio.

I'll say it again ... INVESTMENT!!

If an activity is to have value it must have INVESTMENT.

Whether it be Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts, Little League coach, Soccer MOM, fishing, poker playing, or just watching tv. All require INVESTMENT if it is to have value.

If you don't/can't make the INVESTMENT, find something else to become involved with.

It has nothing to do with hazing.

If you will read Part 97 (the rules that govern amateur radio), the government doesn't care about you doing something new and fun. The section on basis and purpose makes it quite clear that their objectives are quite different. They want people knowledgeable in ham radio and who are interested in expanding that knowledge.

Until and unless you have actually participated in amateur radio in a wide variety of aspects, it is difficult to asses which rules, regulations, knowledge, etc are archaic and which should remain as requirements. Notice that the majority of people advocating ditching requirements are those who have not yet passed those requirements, regardless of their age. Note that the majority of people advocating keeping the requirements have passed them and have experience in amateur radio again regardless of their age.

As far as "busy people" go, again refer to the basis and purpose as given in the rules. The government is not concerned about your choice of how you use your time. It has no bearing on what their goals are.

> Can you give me valid reasons as to what useful purpose in today's age

Every piece of knowledge has its uses. The difficult part is winnowing through it and decide what should be tested and what should not.

Here's why I think code should still be tested:
1. It is still one of the basic building blocks of ham radio. For example, one of the "hot" digital modes is PSK31. The developer drew upon personal experience and incorporated features derived from that mode to make a robust digital mode.
2. Because it is not "book learning", too many people will avoid it since it is different than the type of learning they are accustomed to. They will falsely think it is hard when in reality it is different. Requiring them to learn it gets them over that resistance hump.
3. Each and every mode has its strong points and weak points. Each of us that participate in ham radio should attempt to gain personal experience in those modes so that we know by that personal experience what those strengths and weaknesses are.

If you are interested, I could construct various scenarios where mode X is the best mode. However, unless you specifically want to know, I won't clutter up the newsgroup at this time with discussions that have been repeated many times by many people already.

Dee, N8UZE

LenAnderson, You have obviously made an INVESTMENT in your technical profession. Make one in your participation in the radio service!!

Amateur Radio is a SERVICE!!!   If you only think of it as a hobby your thinking is flawed.

Here's another:

""SOMALIA, THE BLACK HOLE OF ANARCHY

BY AHMED Q. BURSALIID

In mid July 2005 The U.S. intelligence agents, working with local warlords, have carried out counter terrorist operations to seize sus=ADpects. "Somalia remains the theatre for a shadowy confrontation involving local Ji=ADhadis, foreign Al Qaeda operatives and in=ADtelligence services from a number of re=ADgional and Western countries," says a report by the International Crisis Group in 2005. The report says the "dirty war be=ADtween terrorists and counter-terrorist oper=ADatives in Mogadishu appears to have en=ADtered a new and more vicious stage that threatens to push the country further towards Jihadism and extremist violence un=ADless its root causes are properly addressed."

The Somali transitional federal government was formed in neighbouring Kenya in 2004 and moved into Somalia June 2005. However, the administration has failed to relocate to Mogadishu, the Somali capital, because the city was considered unsafe. Due to the insecurity of Mogadishu, the TFG relocated to Jawhar, which it later decided to move to Baidoa.

Warlords and leaders of Islamic courts have been fighting in Mogadishu for about five months. This led to the loss of hundreds of civilians and destruction of properties. Somalia, which had been in a state of anarchy for more than a decade, has once again gone to war; this war was somehow different from previous ones. The nature of this war is seen to have some religious and political clash while previous ones were much related to tribal and feudal conflicts. Each one of the conflicting parties is claiming that the other group is related to Al-Qaeda when the reality is somehow different from that. After months of armed conflicts within the capital city of Somalia, Union of Islamic Courts took the lead with enormous points by eliminating the warlords who took hostage the country and its people for 16 years.

United States of America, which earlier denied any allegation of helping or giving hand to the warlords in the fight to weed out the Islamic Militia in Somalia shortly after the takeover admitted that it had been supporting warlords to destabilise the Islamic militia. America has been an active player in the politics of Somalia, and until now its policy towards restoring peace and stability in the war -torn Somalia is somehow obscure.

Somalis believe that it is the right time to take advantage to restore the lost hope of good governance in the country as Union of Islamic Courts led by Sheikh Sharif imposed law and order on Mogadishu, which was seen neither for 16 years. Hundreds of families from overseas countries returned back to Mogadishu, the capital city of Somalia since the takeover took place.

At first Transitional Federal Government welcomed the political change, which took place in Mogadishu as the Union of Islamic Courts disarmed a pack of US-backed warlords that took the country and its people hostage for more than a decade. But soon after the Islamic Militia started to capture some other cities, the TFG warned the Union of Islamic Courts of capturing farther cities. A big gap of political misunderstanding came in between the Transitional Federal Government and the Union of Islamic Courts, after the president of fragile Transitional Federal Government requested peacekeeping forces from the African Union. As the new Somali constitution inked in Kenya says, "Peacekeeping forces should not come from the neighbouring countries (Ethiopia, Kenya and Djibouti)". Likewise, the parliament passed a motion, which it was requesting peacekeeping troops to Somalia without paying attention to the classification of peacekeeping forces from AU countries and of front line countries. This has created an escalation of political crisis in Somalia. Ethiopia, which is the common enemy of Somalia has sent its troops to Somalia in an attempt to protect the Transitional Federal Government.

This time, Arab League took the political platform of Somalia to mediate the two conflicting parties. TFG and UIC were invited to attend a mediation conference held on June 2006 in Sudan to settle their differences. After a reconciliation conference, presided over by Sudanese president Omar Hassan Albashir, the current chairman of Arab League, the reconciliation process derailed with unknown reasons but it is believed that Ethiopia was the main figure, which made the reconciliation process fail as the outcome of the meeting could not meet the criteria of Ethiopia's plan to Somalia and then, President Abdullahi Yusuf Ahmed, a well-known pro-Ethiopian warlord and his loyal prime minister Ali Mohamed Gedi, a vet scientist started to advocate the legality of Ethiopian Army presence in Somalia.

The Somalis are of the opinion that the involvement of Ethiopian Army in the peacekeeping operations in Somalia could cause havoc and deterioration of the political condition of the country in any case as Ethiopia is an old aged enemy of Somalia in East Africa. While a vast majority of the Somali public strongly opposed to deployment of Ethiopian troop into Somalia under any pretext, president Yusuf's political stance towards the deployment of Ethiopian troops in Somalia is clear and also in action by denying the presence of Ethiopian troops in Somalia just to protect his presidential seat.

Since the reconciliation conference in Sudan derailed a number of ministers resigned due to the political misunderstanding between TFG and UIC. Prime minister declared that he would be nominating successors of the resigned 24 ministers. In addition to that, the prime minister himself survived after the Somali parliament passed a motion of no confidence against him recently.

Moreover, Prime minister of Ethiopia Milez zanawi whose government earlier denied any presence of Ethiopian troops in Somalia told BBC that his government has sent troops to Somalia to protect the Transitional Federal Government from the Union of Islamic Courts. While on the other hand, Eritrea is also believed to be an active supporter for the Union of Islamic Courts. Somalis believe that the support from both Ethiopia and Eritrea respectively is much related to a proxy war in between them.
US government warned Ethiopia and Eritrea stop the proxy war they are playing in the Somali territory.

As long a 'Rare DX' uses CW, CW will live and thrive in the DX community.

A DX pile of 100 stations on CW occupies much less bandwidth than 1 SSB station.
The CW contact rate exceeds the SSB rate.

As long a 'Rare DX' uses CW, CW will live and thrive in the DX community.

It's your choice: if you want to play the DX game learn the rules including 25 wpm CW.

If you want to operate an appliance, but an appliance.

thanks ... enough waiting, going to take the digital plunge ... :-) can't find uniden locally, so radio shack it is.

Bullshit
I value my tech license not because I had to work for it but becuase it has been a great return on my effort

if Ihad had to work twice as hard Id value it half as much

Most likely you will need/want to have a radio that can receive digital signals, which ups the price. But gets you a nice rig.

Without digital you will miss out on a lot; police/fire.

Take a look at these base units. Lots of web reviews to read on these.

Tracks trunked systems like a digital hound dog.
Trunked systems, used by many cities and towns, jump from one frequency to another with every transmission. You need a trunking scanner to allow you to hear the entire conversation. Digital trunked systems, which are becoming more common, can only be followed using a digital trunking scanner. The PRO-2096 follows both digital and analog sytems, including 9600bps control channel and C-QPSK modulation.
Listen to law enforcement officers and fire fighters, and hear advance warnings of dangerous weather conditions. Frequency coverage: 25-50MHz VHF-Lo, 50-54MHz 6-meter Ham, 108-136.9875MHz aircraft, 137-174, 216.0025-225MHz, 406-512MHz, 806-960MHz (excluding cellular bands), 1240-1300MHz.

Tunes virtually all important bands--local marine, fire/police, HAM,

From: Dave <W...@comcast.net> on Tues, Aug 29 2006 4:38 pm

>technical profession.

Yes, I have. Not only has it been intellectually rewarding, it was also monetarily rewarding...for the last 54 years.

>Make one in your participation in the radio service!!

Kiss my yes, "Dave," I've "participated" in numerous radio SERVICES of USA civil radio and in DoD contract work from below LF to Ku-Band. In these previous 54 years I've communicated from land, from the air, from the ocean surface...even once "worked" a station ON the moon. Never once in 53 years was I EVER required to either use or know on-off-keying manual radiotelegraphy.

>Amateur Radio is a SERVICE!!!   If you only think of it as a hobby your thinking >is flawed.

"Dave," you are SO FLAWED that you can't think straight. Here's the real story:

Go to the FULL Title 47, C.F.R., and LOOK at ALL the radio SERVICES. The word "service" used in Title 47 is a regulatory term denoting a type and kind of radio activity being regulated under a Part. Go write the FCC if you don't believe that. But, you won't believe that since you are obviously stuck in some kind of "patriotic" pipe-dream where you think a HOBBY activity is some kind of "national service."

Look in Part 95, the Personal Radio SERVICES. In there you will find the Citizens Band Radio SERVICE and the Radio-Control Radio SERVICE. Those are all SERVICES, "Dave."

There is NOTHING wrong with having a HOBBY. It's a fine hobby in fact. What is wrong, seriously wrong, with your (observable) thinking is that US amateur radio is some kind of quasi-military "national need" that is somehow "important to the national welfare." It isn't. Amateur radio is about as "vital to the nation" as CB or some model airplane flyers on one of the 72 MHz channels.

Yes, HAMS get neat certificates from the federal government (suitable for framing) and like to go around saying "they are 'authorized' by the feds" as if that were some Nobel-laureate accomplishment. It isn't. The FCC is tasked with regulating and mitigating ALL United States civil radio. Since amateur radio transmitters emit RF that requires the FCC to regulate it. The FCC, or rather its predecessors (before 1934), decided that licensing was a way of doing that regulation. To get that license required taking a test. That TEST was never, ever any sort of academic achievement thing (FCC was never chartered to be an academic institution), just something to satisfy the FCC that a license applicant was sufficiently knowledgeable to get that license. Note: Satisfed the FCC...not the ARRL, NOT the nebulous "ham community" or even any "Hams in da Hood."

Have you got that straight yet, "Dave?" Did you take some kind of oath of "service" on getting your amateur license? Raise the right hand and repeat after whoever was prompting you on the oath? No? I didn't think so.

I took a REAL oath on 13 March 1952, "Dave," entering the United States Army. A Real SERVICE, "Dave." I did my "eight" and got an Honorable Discharge. From February 1953 to end of January 1956 I worked HF comms in Big Time radio. You can even download a photo essay of that from this link:

http://sujan.hallikainen.org/BroadcastHistory/uploads/My3Years.pdf

It's 6 MB and will take about 19 minutes download over a POTS dial-up connection. If you look closely at those 20 pages you won't find a single thing about "working CW" (on-off-keying manual telegraphy) yet the whole station ran 24/7 pushing about 220K messages a month. It would be IMPOSSIBLE to send that many (some of which were encrypted) by manual telegraphy unless the signal battalion was doubled. It didn't have to be because the messages got through and on-time. That was 53 to 51 years ago, "Dave."

What do you think the military uses NOW for communications? Data, "Dave," Data. High-speed data, "Dave," not some dinky

1200 baud amateur stuff. DIGITAL. Digital can be on-line encrypted and on-line decrypted securely.

WTF, "Dave?" So, you tacked on a bunch of undescribed acronym things supposedly project numbers or IDs. Are we to be "impressed?" I'm not. I've worked alongside and for PhDs who didn't bother with IMAGE and all that rank-status-title BS... WE got the job done, working together.

Amateur radio MIGHT get something done working together. But, you olde-tymers won't. You have to RULE, holding fast to the traditions of 50 to 70 years ago...because YOU and all the olde-tymers had to do it so everyone else has to...and all you olde-tymer morsemen think that "CW" is somehow "best." It isn't "best." If you really have a BSEE instead of just PR BS about morsemanship, you would realize that.

"Dave," amateur radio isn't about missles. Save your energy for donating DVDs of "Strategic Air Command" (starring Jimmy Stewart) to give to impressionable youngsters.

I've been in the smoke-and-fire trade of rocket engines for a little while (Rocketdyne Division of Rockwell International). Trust me, rocket engines do NOT use manual radiotelegraphy. BTW, SAC is GONE, "Dave." A whole reorganization in the USAF some time ago. No more "oil burner routes" or flying out to loiter near the USSR (the USSR is gone, too). BTW, there were SSB transmitters emitting 12 KHz wide RF long before SAC got the single-channel SSB stuff to use on such loitering. I know, having to keep a few of those REAL SSB transmitters running correctly.

Now, "Dave," I can't fault on-off-keying CW any. The key fob for our 2005 Malibu MAXX uses that. Yes, the last vestige of high-speed CW (REAL CW) done digitally. Done by the hundreds of thousands all over the country daily. Nearly all of them operated by unlicensed NON-MORSE-TESTED civilians! That Chebbie got in our garage courtesy of "investments," "Dave." Investments in REAL work, not playing like big-time 1930s radio ops "jobs" of a long-past age by AMATEURS.

Dee, the "rules that govern amateur radio" are the ENTIRETY
of Title 47 C.F.R. I don't care that the ARRL pushes ONLY Part 97. Part 1 has plenty about amateur radio as well as a few other Parts. Look it up. It's free at the US Government Printing Office website.

>The section

The "objectives" of the FCC are to regulate and mitigate ALL civil radio in the USA, Dee. That's what the Communications Act of 1934 and the Telecommunications Act of 1996 chartered
them to do (plus quite a bit on wireline comms...which don't apply to amateur radio).

The "Basis and Purpose" has a lot of POLITICAL boilerplate
SERVICES. Get real.

> They want people knowledgeable in ham radio and who are >interested in expanding that knowledge.

FOLLOWING THE REGULATIONS, Dee. That's their job. The
THE REGULATIONS.

"George," you've got a whole bunch in this forum who think that amateur radio is some kind of veddy formal "JOB" with absolutes on THE WAY THEY DO IT. It's almost draconian in the insistence of "correct proceedure." No one will get fired from that "job" if they don't use "correct" ways but

Horsepuckey. Dee, "George" is talking about GETTING INTO
amateur radio. Don't give us this olde-tymer morseperson
"I've operated all the modes there are" stuff. Dee, I've operated lots more modes on radio than YOU are allowed to
as an amateur.

Manual morse code ability IS an ARCHAIC mode of communications
Dee. ALL the other US radio services have either dropped it for comms or never bothered with it in the first place. ALL.
The ARRL and the olde-tyme morsepersons insist that the manual
morse test "MUST" remain to "show something" about commitment and dedication. To WHOM, Dee? To YOU? To da Hams in da hood?

>Notice
>that the majority of people advocating ditching requirements are those who >have not yet passed those requirements, regardless of their age.

Dee, before you get to the downright-bitchy stage, may I remind
you that some of us professionals in radio and electronics
NEVER BOTHERED WITH AN AMATEUR RADIO TEST? I got my First 'Phone
in 1956. Considerably more testing involved than a ham license test then. Could YOU get a GROL now? Could YOU get a job working with radio hardware?

>Note that >the majority of people advocating keeping the requirements have passed them >and have experience in amateur radio again regardless of their age.

Yes, nine-year-old Extras possess the maturity and wisdom of the ages, all through having taken that morse test and gotten that magic certificate (suitable for framing).

>As far as "busy people" go, again refer to the basis and purpose as given in >the rules. The government is not concerned about your choice of how you use >your time. It has no bearing on what their goals are.

Dee, you are LECTURING again. [just how long have you been in ANY radio?]

Dee, go look at some 1990 documents on the creation of the no-code-test Technician license. There's a copy available for free download on the NCI website. Over 16 years ago the FCC said outright that it didn't think the manual morse code test suited their purpose in granting an amateur radio license. The FCC said the same thing in last year's NPRM.

I DO have to remind you that the FCC's only job is to REGULATE all civil radio in the USA. Their only task is to do that and mitigate matters of interference with other radio services (plus wireline but that's not concerning amateurs). Theirs is not to brainwash hams...that's the ARRL's task.

>> Can you give me valid reasons as to what useful purpose in today's age >> they serve?

[stand by for the LITANY from the Church of St. Hiram]

>Every piece of knowledge has its uses. The difficult part is winnowing >through it and decide what should be tested and what should not.

Ahem, to olde-tyme morsepersons, manual morse code skill MUST be tested for any radio privileges below 30 MHz. That's engraved in everlasting marble and protected by nuclear-blast armor plate.

>Here's why I think code should still be tested:
>1. It is still one of the basic building blocks of ham radio.

Horsepucky. It was only the first mode used...had to be in the primitive-technology of early radio using "spark." Spark is outlawed now, Dee.

> For example, >one of the "hot" digital modes is PSK31. The developer drew upon personal >digital mode.

More sinning-by-omission, Dee. Peter Martinez, G3PLX, innovated PSK31. Using the available Information Theory rules he knew about, derived from commercial and military technology. It was field-tested for years in Europe by many amateurs there before it got any publicity over here. "Hot" is over a decade OLD, Dee. In 1974 Peter was doing great things with polyphase networks for voice SSB...it was written up in RSGB's membership magazine. I doubt the ARRL bothered with publicizing it.

>2. Because it is not "book learning", too many people will avoid it since >it is different than the type of learning they are accustomed to. They will

So...morsemanship really IS a barrier. You admit it.

>3. Each and every mode has its strong points and weak points. Each of us >that participate in ham radio should attempt to gain personal experience in >and weaknesses are.

Dee, I started out working as an Illustrator. That's an artist who draws/paints things as they really are. I have an aptitude for that. It is as natural to me to draw, fairly well I might add, as a physically-endowed athlete is to sports or another with a musical aptitude is to playing an instrument. The ability to "advance" in manual morse code skill is NOT a "natural" one but an aptitude in only a few of us. The US military even tested for that aptitude in all recruits of the 1940s and 1950s. [I got okay marks in that, by the way...:-)]

The first radio operators used manual morse code. First, it was fine for the primitive state of the art. Second, it was a mature mode in the wireline communications, a technology even more primitive than radio of that time. Telegraphers weren't taken off the street...they either had the aptitude or they didn't. Once "radio" got going, the telegraphers (downsized from wireline comms by those new-fangled teleprinter thingies) made much of their "abilities" using on-off-keying manual morse. The Morse Mythos was born and grew like wildfire. Good, good newsprint copy!

But, as time progressed there came NEW modes, much faster and more accurate, without need of morse specialists at each end of a circuit. The radio telegraphers were downsized. They retired and turned to amateur radio of pre-WW2 times. Morse was still king of the modes and ARRL (by the 1930s) was hailing the king as the "best" for all amateurs. None of this newfangled thing called "voice" for them although they did pay lip-service to it. By 1940 the ARRL was King of the membership organizations (through their publications) and they maintained that morsemanship was the epitome of amateur comms. They kept that up after WW2 and on into the single-channel SSB start in the 1950s...again paying lip-service to this newfangled SSB. And you know what? ARRL is STILL trying to promote morsemanship even if sinning-by omission once more.

Back before WRC-03 (that's over three years ago) the IARU took a position that the amateur radio license tests for morse ability was NOT mandatory...make it an option for each administration. Lots of folks went along with that, but NOT the ARRL. League was almost vehement in opposition. OK, the ITU-R amateur radio regulations were CHANGED, going along the lines of the IARU position. [that's the International Amateur Radio Union, Dee] Ah, but NOW the ARRL takes a neutral position, won't go either way...they just say that all amateurs must obey the law...but they lobbied last year to keep SOME manual morse testing for the under-30-MHz privileges. 92 years after being formed, the ARRL just can't give up and change to what OTHER folks want...

>the best mode.

"X-Files" was cancelled, Dee. [cousin Gillian got a vacation]

>However, unless you specifically want to know, I won't >clutter up the newsgroup at this time with discussions that have been >repeated many times by many people already.

Please, go on, Dee. I want to hear from your vast experience in radio and all your guru-like knowledge of what is "best" for radio amateurs. Especially WHY everyone has to emulate the olde-tyme amateur days, the ones before you were born.

>technical profession.

Yes, I have. Not only has it been intellectually rewarding, it was also monetarily rewarding...for the last 54 years.

>Make one in your participation in the radio service!!

Kiss my yes, "Dave," I've "participated" in numerous radio SERVICES of USA civil radio and in DoD contract work from below LF to Ku-Band. In these previous 54 years I've communicated from land, from the air, from the ocean surface...even once "worked" a station ON the moon. Never once in 53 years was I EVER required to either use or know on-off-keying manual radiotelegraphy.

>Amateur Radio is a SERVICE!!! If you only think of it as a hobby your thinking >is flawed.

"Dave," you are SO FLAWED that you can't think straight. Here's the real story:

Go to the FULL Title 47, C.F.R., and LOOK at ALL the radio SERVICES. The word "service" used in Title 47 is a regulatory term denoting a type and kind of radio activity being regulated under a Part. Go write the FCC if you don't believe that. But, you won't believe that since you are obviously stuck in some kind of "patriotic" pipe-dream where you think a HOBBY activity is some kind of "national service."

Look in Part 95, the Personal Radio SERVICES. In there you will find the Citizens Band Radio SERVICE and the Radio-Control Radio SERVICE. Those are all SERVICES, "Dave."

There is NOTHING wrong with having a HOBBY. It's a fine hobby in fact. What is wrong, seriously wrong, with your (observable) thinking is that US amateur radio is some kind of quasi-military "national need" that is somehow "important to the national welfare." It isn't. Amateur radio is about as "vital to the nation" as CB or some model airplane flyers on one of the 72 MHz channels.

Yes, HAMS get neat certificates from the federal government (suitable for framing) and like to go around saying "they are 'authorized' by the feds" as if that were some Nobel-laureate accomplishment. It isn't. The FCC is tasked with regulating and mitigating ALL United States civil radio. Since amateur radio transmitters emit RF that requires the FCC to regulate it. The FCC, or rather its predecessors (before 1934), decided that licensing was a way of doing that regulation. To get that license required taking a test. That TEST was never, ever any sort of academic achievement thing (FCC was never chartered to be an academic institution), just something to satisfy the FCC that a license applicant was sufficiently knowledgeable to get that license. Note: Satisfed the FCC...not the ARRL, NOT the nebulous "ham community" or even any "Hams in da Hood."

Have you got that straight yet, "Dave?" Did you take some kind of oath of "service" on getting your amateur license? Raise the right hand and repeat after whoever was prompting you on the oath? No? I didn't think so.

I took a REAL oath on 13 March 1952, "Dave," entering the United States Army. A Real SERVICE, "Dave." I did my "eight" and got an Honorable Discharge. From February 1953 to end of January 1956 I worked HF comms in Big Time radio. You can even download a photo essay of that from this link:

http://sujan.hallikainen.org/BroadcastHistory/uploads/My3Years.pdf

It's 6 MB and will take about 19 minutes download over a POTS dial-up connection. If you look closely at those 20 pages you won't find a single thing about "working CW" (on-off-keying manual telegraphy) yet the whole station ran 24/7 pushing about 220K messages a month. It would be IMPOSSIBLE to send that many (some of which were encrypted) by manual telegraphy unless the signal battalion was doubled. It didn't have to be because the messages got through and on-time. That was 53 to 51 years ago, "Dave."

What do you think the military uses NOW for communications? Data, "Dave," Data. High-speed data, "Dave," not some dinky 1200 baud amateur stuff. DIGITAL. Digital can be on-line encrypted and on-line decrypted securely.

You show me where the REAL Services use manual radiotelegraphy, "Dave." They don't. It is voice and/or data, most of it in the field done DIGITALLY.

WTF, "Dave?" So, you tacked on a bunch of undescribed acronym things supposedly project numbers or IDs. Are we to be "impressed?" I'm not. I've worked alongside and for PhDs who didn't bother with IMAGE and all that rank-status-title BS... WE got the job done, working together.

Amateur radio MIGHT get something done working together. But, you olde-tymers won't. You have to RULE, holding fast to the traditions of 50 to 70 years ago...because YOU and all the olde-tymers had to do it so everyone else has to...and all you olde-tymer morsemen think that "CW" is somehow "best." It isn't "best." If you really have a BSEE instead of just PR BS about morsemanship, you would realize that.

"Dave," amateur radio isn't about missles. Save your energy for donating DVDs of "Strategic Air Command" (starring Jimmy Stewart) to give to impressionable youngsters.

I've been in the smoke-and-fire trade of rocket engines for a little while (Rocketdyne Division of Rockwell International). Trust me, rocket engines do NOT use manual radiotelegraphy. BTW, SAC is GONE, "Dave." A whole reorganization in the USAF some time ago. No more "oil burner routes" or flying out to loiter near the USSR (the USSR is gone, too). BTW, there were SSB transmitters emitting 12 KHz wide RF long before SAC got the single-channel SSB stuff to use on such loitering. I know, having to keep a few of those REAL SSB transmitters running correctly.

Now, "Dave," I can't fault on-off-keying CW any. The key fob for our 2005 Malibu MAXX uses that. Yes, the last vestige of high-speed CW (REAL CW) done digitally. Done by the hundreds of thousands all over the country daily. Nearly all of them operated by unlicensed NON-MORSE-TESTED civilians! That Chebbie got in our garage courtesy of "investments," "Dave." Investments in REAL work, not playing like big-time 1930s radio ops "jobs" of a long-past age by AMATEURS.

OK.... taking a poll....

By replying only in CW, either text dit-dah, or periods and hyphens......

How many people actually read that, and what is your analysis of the report?

I am running a script to see how long it takes you to click reply, enter your response, then click send. Your effective scaled-score code speed will be calculated from those particular clicks, along with the character count of the message. You will be made fun of, according to your CW speed. Anyone less than 24wpm will be required to take the new FCC

Gentlemen, gud luck.

The problem is the little bulbs burn out too often and are next to impossible to obtain locally. And Now that apparently weak transistor has blown as well. LED's seem a far better option.

Huh? You mean there is something besides CW?? Man, don't you know CW saves lives?!?!?

Listen, Weak signals are for CW work on HF while boats are burning.
Contacting the space shuttle is just pointless unless you're correcting their keplerian elements for the return flight path or asking if they really drink Tang, Sporadic E [aka EMF bombing] is really pissing off the Condensation Entities that periodically enter the atmosphere to scan for intelligent life, and tropospheric ducting is a lie. I happen to have the control codes to several am-sats and I randomly change the freqs all the time, and you suckers fall for it without fail....
And DX? Hello....? Internet....?

Welp, when the AF took the airplanes away from the Army in 1947...

...this guy named Sikorsky came along and sold them some helicopters.
Anyway, they were a lot of fun and the idea really caught on. Now the marines have them, too. Robesin says he worked on helicopters in some capacity, and got hisself involved in 7 hostile actions.

The aluminum skin of a C130 is sort of hard to see through. The only craft that I ever saw with a glass underbelly was a tour boat in Florida.

But you can rest assured that neither robesin nor the CAP was flying that C130.

20 is SLOW. But the only way to learn 35 or 40 is to learn 10, 15, 20 etc.
And the best way to do that is get on the bands and DO it instead of making rude noises at the people who CAN.

Phonetics on SSB are usually a lot slower than 20wpm, though.

We have three tests her in Canada now. The Basic gets you on the air.
If you get an 80% or higher score you get HF privileges with that.
You're limited in power and must use commercially built, approved gear.

If you want to roll your own gear or put up a repeater or something, then write the Advanced. You'll get full HF privileges.

If you want to be known as morse proficient, then take the code test.
That will get you on HF even if you just PASSED your Basic. But if you already have the Advanced, then it will get you a nic shiny morse endorsement and a sense of accomplishment.

And no, the sky didn't fall any further than it already did when we dropped the code requirement for Basic and made it VHF only.

Well, it certainly happened to me. Of course I can't say whether it actually SAVED any lives. Because maybe they would have been saved anyway, though it sure helped that I could figure out what was wrong.

But you see, a lot of ships used CW at that time.

50wpm is relatively easy. Now back in 1975 when I was out on Sable Island, I broke in on some guys on 80m with my nice new computer, programmed to send morse from the terminal keyboard (but still requiring a human ear to hear). They were going 65 and wanted to know if I could "copy the morse code." One kid there used to QSO me and he'd start out at 60 and ramp up. He was 13.

Well, to be honest, I leave my keyer set at 25wpm. That's a good steady speed for general working. I'm only likely to speed it up if I'm in a contest or something.

This can be SO simple. I should have thought of this weeks ago.
I'll simply x-post Marks comments to two or three of the extreme Muslim newsgroups and be sure that they realize he is a bisexual Jew. Wiseman already posted Marks address....
It should take four or five months, six tops, before a Camel Jockey or two pays Mark a visit. There are lots of em in Dearborn, which is less than a three hour drive from Chassell.

Why didn't I think of this sooner?

Fire Chief was the regular grade sold by Texaco.  Their premium was Sky Chief.

In the 1950s, Sunoco sold only one grade of gasoline, which was supposed to be a "near premium".  Its gimmick was that it was dyed blue, whereas other gasolines were yellow to red.  In the 1960s, its super-premium was Sunoco 260 from the "custom blend" pump.

becuase the ISP will not retrain the trollss anymore which means the troll crosspost everything every where this set is relitively mild and at least is confined to radio NGs

Ok.... you just ruined your whole argument.... you're now comparing commercial and professional ops to amateur ops.
What is your point? The issue here is hobby radio operated by hobbyists.

The dark question has yet to be asked anyway... "Should amateur radio ops be held to professional standards?"
Or maybe it's something about saving a life with CW... it's kinda muddy at this point....

Excuse me? If you are going to operate on a worldwide basis, you should be well versed on world languages so you don't have that problem. Ask any hi-speed op and they should agree.
The funny part being most all foreign ops know English and most US natives are small appliance bulbs in a world of Xenon driving lights.

Git'em Cecil....

I'm still wondering why he thinks we'd be in the CW band in the first place.
I've killed millions with my lax attitude towards listening in, and figure I'll be guilty of genocide before I'm done!

LOL.... I assume you think you've made a point at any time?

It's a simple yes or no question....
If you had to use CW to save someone's life, would that person die?
Stay on point please.

Sheesh, why would we be in the CW band in the first place, and then why taking down code or voice in a foreign language we don't understand?
That Mister, must be the epitome of ham....

You know, there are children starving in South America, Babies being slaughtered at birth in India, and you think some stupid ham op parked in a chair in poshville USA has a clue about anything that really matters?
Oh! I know CW, I know CW! I passed a message once and saved the world! And for the next 30 years I bumbled around in my back yard drinking beer, eating donuts and doing nothing for anyone except my own self.

Arrogant Americans lost in space.
That's thick.

Bam... burnin' beepin' ball of fire trailing smoke to the white bubbly patch in the ocean.... [next to the beepin' burnin' boat]...

Let's get with it people.... are we have a commercial radio argument or an amateur radio argument???

If commercial then we all agree, argument is moot.

If amateur, it doesn't matter as it's just a hobby, argument is moot.

Make up your mind folks. Either this is a stupid argument or it's a stupid point to argue.
[hint: its the one that's stupid]

I thought it was illegal to change modes during the EMF stage... ??
You should be able to remodulate your carrier to offset the gravimetric effect on the signal as it nears subspace. I scavenged a modulator wheel from an electronic piano and work it with the left hand whilst straight-keying with my right, as obviously this can't be done with a keyer or bug of any kind.
Manual manipulation of each character's component time/phase is a must to get a synch.

Yeah, those "real" radio ops really have it tough, don't they? There should be a reality show called
"Two-Way Trauma: Life in the radio room."

LOGSA the Logistics Supply Agency is busy making CDs of all the printed manuals for darn near ALL military equipment; it's a piece of cake to pop one of those CDs in an ever-present military PC and read them. LOGSA has a website and even civilians can download some of the older equipment's manuals. LOGSA has some internal priority on what can be downloaded (depending on the cookie generated by a non-military PC). That was a tip I got from rec.radio.amateur.boatanchors and rec.radio.amateur.homebrew. The nomenclatures and quick-look facts are on a couple websites in a long, long, long list. Even BAMA has some manuals for free download plus big link lists for other sites that have them.
> Robesin DID list some (questionable) nomenclatures for MARS equipment once but NOTHING else. That kind of info can be had from other hams' personal websites. MARS doesn't normally talk about regular military tactical radio gear. MARS doesn't normally use such. :-)

I saw a C-130 fly almost directly over my house last year. Couldn't see who was in it though...

That because they're all appliance operators, they don't want to put forth an effort to learn and it will end up sounding like CB.

ARRL threw principle out the window when they caved in to the demands of the Lambda Amateur Radio Club (LARC). It was a sad day for me indeed when I opened my beloved QST magazine and there on the pages were photos of queers on a Tropical DXpedition, and in living color no less. The ARRL wanted us to embrace a sick perverted lifestyle and be one big happy family. To me, it was the spark that signaled the death of a once proud organization, and it turned liberal.

Now the queers have all but taken over, they're like the military wing of the Democratic party, and always in your face. It's not even safe to take your kids to Easter egg hunts anymore. I know you're all going to disagree with me, but a man touching and sucking on another man's cock and screwing his ass just ain't right. The ARRL promoted this, now look what happened to our radio groups now that Mark, Roger, and Lloyd have come out of the closet.

Nah, if ya can't beat 'em join 'em.... Help us out, we're making a Comm-Post pile!

And my answer is this:

If someone took ham radio, let 'em have it. Fighting to get it back is like fighting over a turd in the sewer.
Just enjoy what you have, and float on down the river, to your Cajun hideaway.....

Mike,

I can burn you a copy of Police Call V6. Only problem is that it asks for a word (usually the last word) of a page in the book. Sort of a password.
Comes now the rub, I can't find my copy of the book!!!! I'll be looking.

In the mean time, would you like a disk. Email me and let me have an address to send it to. Hope this is of help....Eric (in California)

You'll probably never have to use CW to save a life, but you should learn it anyway just in case.  Ham radio is like a spare tire, when you need it you hope it's not flat. CW is like the air in the tire.  I know I don't

I'd be both, but the CB'ers would have to agree to:

1: No more automatic renewals. CB'ers must retest and pass all elements required for the Extra class.

2: The passing score for written exams needs to be raised to 85%.

3: Code elements, 13 wpm for General, and 20 wpm for Extra and CB'ers.

4: Make the no-code license one year non-renewable.

Tnx, 73, Keep up the good work.   Burp.

Logically, the fantastically unlikely is the one thing you SHOULD be prepared for. According to Murphy, whatever can go wrong, WILL go wrong, and at the least opportune time.

Yeah, me thinks you're right. This thing has dragged on long enough. It is getting boring. What IS - IS and until someone - like the FCC changes things - it shall stay as it is. No amount of bitching here will get it done. So, if you want a license, lump it and learn it. If not - its your loss.

I just read the latest QST. In "How's DX?" the author notes that ham radio "used to be" the prime communication from and to Haiti. But now, with cell phones, satellite, etc. it is no longer as important.

This is the real world. Morse is NOT the issue.

Relevance (is that the correct spelling?) is the issue.

Ham radio really WANTS to help in emergencies. This is very commendable. I think, though, we've been sidelined.

We're still there "when all else fails". Morale of those involved remains high, from what I hear / read.

However, in a typical emergency, ham radio is not nearly as primary as it used to be. It's OK. We can still contribute.

Communications have been "universalized"...anyone can use a cell phone.
It's natural that communications-specialists see their need waning.

It's OK.

As a hobby, ham radio has a LOT to offer. When I mention to others that I have re-entered ham radio, many people ask "Is that still around?"

Man, of COURSE, it's still around.

If you discuss ham radio with others, do you mention contacting the Space Shuttle? ham radio satellites? weak signal work in VHF/UHF? Sporadic E? Tropospheric Ducting? DX???

How about EME?

You don't have to be doing these things yourself, you just need to let everyone know what the ENTIRE hobby is about.

Morse, data, SSB, FM all have a place.

Ham radio is NOT dying. Hams are. Share our hobby, in ALL its forms, generously with those you know. The rest will take care of itself, for better or worse.

Change 5/14/00 to 4/2/03 - *+*13068
Change 4/2/03 to 9/6/04 - -13072
Change 9/6/04 to 6/30/06 - -16974

What a perfect example if ignoring evidence that doesn't back up your argument. There was no change in Morse from 5/14/00 to 4/2/03, yet we GAINED over 13,000 hams, so how is a Morse requirement decreasing the number of hams?

Does anybody knows if, and where, I can download the user's manual (or service manual) for this scanner?
It's the Radioshack/Realistic Pro 2600 400 channel Model no. 20-9145.

Thanks!!!!!

You've insisted on posting this crap so many times just about anyone with more than two or three brain cells would be sick of it by now. Why don't you just crawl back under the rock you crawled out from under?

At this point, even a relative moron should get the point that there are a bunch of people that really don't give a damn about CW. That you do is not the point, but your continual posts about it are the point. Therefore, your continual posts lead me to believe you should be seeking mental help. If you don't think you need therapy, how about you get a life and if you are so Pro-CW, why aren't you on the bands right now?

Though I'm an Extra and passed the CW requirements shouldn't make a difference if I choose to operate phone. If the requirements change and new Hams aren't required to take the code test, am I going to be pissed? Hell no, because I took the tests when I did because I wanted to be a productive part of this hobby, not wait for an easier ticket in. I learned it, just as a huge number of others have, but none of us wish to push it like you seem to want to. Even the most die-hard CW fanatic is spending his time on the bands, not on the internet trolling for arguments.

Now, to provide a response to your query: It is extremely unlikely that with all the means we have for contact in the case of an emergency, that CW would be the only way to make contact, particularly if you live in anything near an urban evironment in mainland US. First and foremost, there has to be someone else that will respond to you, and given the things going on with the hobby lately, I doubt that CW will be the safety net you'd like to believe it is.

For myself, I have HF and VHF in both the house and vehicle, and have the VHF radios all programmed with all of the local police and fire frequencies. In a true emergency, I wouldn't lose a moment's time worrying about whether it was legal or not before I keyed up on a public service/fire/police frequency if it meant saving somebody. Would CW help? Not very damn likely, as first I'd have to key up the HF rig, get to someone that could relay, pass a message, hope like hell that they actually did call the proper authority, (and were believed), and so on. You can bet I'll get attention right away if I key up on any of the public service frequencies, and they damn well will respond, if for no other reason than to find me. If that's what it takes, so be it, they can fight it out in court later, and I'd get so much media attention they wouldn't dare push it very far. On the other hand, the likelihood of actually being believed using standard, HF and CW procedures, or getting help in a timely manner to actually save a life is an extremely remote chance...

I rarely filter anyone, but you've definitely earned the "plonk" of being filtered. Say Bye-Bye ! ! !

Why in the fuck don't you email him and find out? This was posted to:

rec.antiques.radio+phono,rec.ham-radio.misc,rec.ham-radio.swap,rec.radio.amateur.policy,rec.radio.boatanchors,rec.radio.scanner,rec.radio.shortwave and all but your group was removed before sending.

Jeebus Faust, learn how to head a header or at least click "Show options" at the top of the Google post if you use them.

We wanted your newsgroup to know you are stupid. I wanted you to know I will block your email if you send me crap. Savvy?

First and foremost, there has to be someone else that will respond to you, and given the things going on with the hobby lately, I doubt that CW will be the safety net you'd like to believe it is.

For myself, I have HF and VHF in both the house and vehicle, and have the VHF radios all programmed with all of the local police and fire frequencies. In a true emergency, I wouldn't lose a moment's time worrying about whether it was legal or not before I keyed up on a public service/fire/police frequency if it meant saving somebody. Would CW help? Not very damn likely, as first I'd have to key up the HF rig, get to someone that could relay, pass a message, hope like hell that they actually did call the proper authority, (and were believed), and so on. You can bet I'll get attention right away if I key up on any of the public service frequencies, and they damn well will respond, if for no other reason than to find me. If that's what it takes, so be it, they can fight it out in court later, and I'd get so much media attention they wouldn't dare push it very far. On the other hand, the likelihood of actually being believed using standard, HF and CW procedures, or getting help in a timely manner to actually save a life is an extremely remote chance...

I rarely filter anyone, but you've definitely earned the "plonk" of being filtered. Say Bye-Bye ! ! !

--Rick AH7H

Rick...point well made, tho a bit wordy.
I happen to be in a position whereby I work in law enforcement and have more that one HT in the home charger, said HTs being on the local PD freqs.
Save a life? CW? Not hardly! That is a moot argument, one with no merit save for the spammers who wish to continue the thread for their own, selfish entertainment.
In an emergency I use one of the HTs. They work even when the cell phone service is out.
In a true emergency, CW is not fast enough. It is archaic. It simply doesn't cut the proverbial mustard.
Keep a Marine battery on hand and keep it charged. One can work any number of radios from that.

'Nuff said.

I do happen to know the morse code. At one time I could do 30 wpm.

But the chance that I shall see, in my lifetime, someone drowning in a river when I have with me a battery-operated transmitter, a receiver, an antenna, ground spike, and a morse key is about one in 10,000,000,000.

I would be far more likely to plug in the microphone.

In any case, by the time I had got the gear fixed up and made a suitable contact, the poor victim could have floated out into the Atlantic Ocean.

It would be a good idea to dump the equipment and run downstream along the river bank to the nearest safety belt.

Reg.

nah you use the ground spike to achor your antenna to use as a safety line the tranmiter might make a decent grip might not and then go in and save the guy at least the troll is on topic is all

I'm tired of playing around with the wheat lamps used to backlight the front panel and would like to convert to LED. I don't care snot about retaining the dimming feature. Any one done this?

I suppose it does take a call to figure most things out from Radio Snack or else you end up looking at all the pretty closeout computer and HD crap...I'd rather take a taxi 35 miles to the nearest real electronics parts house myself <grr>

True, I've never had much success during 2 metere aurora openings with anything BUT CW. It ain't CW by the time it gets to the other end, but it's still readable there.

I can do it (and have done so) using phonetics.  But that's SLOWER than
CW.

You're preaching to the choir, Dave.  I've had to handle foreign language traffic phonetically by voice and by CW - and I much prefer CW for that kind of work, even though I prefer voice for most rag-chewing.  As you say, needing it spelled out is quite slow.

I prefer phonetics myself. So are you advocating using the coercive force of the federal government to enforce your preferences instead of mine? Of course you are!

Of course you don't understand a thing Dave and I are discussing. It's surprising that you can find the "on" switch on your computer.

I attended 3 weeks of CWPC training at Maxwell AFB in Montgomery, Alabama.  It hosts CAP HQ.  Didn't see any CAP uniforms there, either.

Odd, though.  The new owner of robesin's old vanity callsign, K4CAP, resides in Montgomery, Alabama.

Too much work for robesin. So he just "classified" everything. He was definitely confused by Major Vincent and his key on a necklace. Hah!

If he was involved in MARS, it was probably just to eavesdrop on morale calls from a lonely GI to his wife or girlfriend back home.

No, we want your sorry ass to stay on CB. Better ham radio exams will help. Let's keep the CB'ers on CB.

1: No more automatic renewals. Individuals must retest and pass all elements required for their license class.

2: The passing score for written exams needs to be raised to 85%.

3: Code elements should be 13 wpm for General, and 20 wpm for Extra.

4: Make the no-code license one year non-renewable.

I have a better idea.

Lets require all Ham radio operators take an I.Q. test. Only upon passing the test would an operator be allowed Amateur privileges.
A score of 130 would be required. This would eliminate 98% of hams and also eliminate overcrowding of the band.

The 98% of Amateurs who flunk would automatically be termed CBers.
This shouldn't be a problem because 98% of Amateurs are nothing but self glorified CBers anyway. They just would never admit it.

Problem solved.

Not me. MY federal government dropped the code requirement a while back--and with my blessing. The sky didn't fall (at least not any further than it already had). But having used CW professionally for years, I know both its strengths and its weaknesses. Its main weakness is that not everyone can do it. PSK31 and PACTOR get a bit of an edge on it when there is no large ionospheric phase distortion happening, but require significantly more equipment.

Back in 1976 when I was doing weather observing for a living on Sable Island, we were required to send the results of two balloon soundings and hourly surface observations to Halifax by RTTY. At night that 2mhz RTTY circuit often became impossible. Nor was the AM circuit any good. I frequently got out a key and sent it on CW. It was actually funny when one of the department's high mucky-muck techs came out to the island to fix the problem. I pointed out that verticals were great on 2mhz for a 192 mile path in the daytime but that they got bogged down in DX signals and QRN at night and suggested that he could improve things by giving us dipoles at both ends for night use. I also suggested that a properly designed VHF link would be superior. He laughed at me. Funny thing is, that man's son went out to Sable afterwards and installed a beacon that I could ALWAYS hear in Halifax, running 8 watts on 144mhz.

The thing is, you don't always know what is saving a life. Those weather observations may have made no difference to anything or they may have made a huge difference to how someone flew a 747.

I don't bother with low-IQ clubs myself.  Or high-IQ ones for that matter.

I did do some work on the question of human intelligence back in the 60's.
It was interesting.  We used factor analysis (now called PCA) and came to the conclusion that it is a six-dimensional vector quantity--to the extent you can measure it at all.

Hello:

I belong to several Yahoo Groups dealing with radio.

Got the following, yesterday and today.

Is it legitamite ?

Thanks,
Bob

Dear Yahoo! Groups member,

You belong to one or more email groups provided by Yahoo! Groups (groups.yahoo.com).

Recently, messages sent to you from Yahoo! Groups have been returned to us as undeliverable. As a result, we have temporarily turned off message delivery to this email address.

If you are reading this message, the delivery problem appears to be fixed. To start receiving your groups messages by email again and turn your account back on, please visit:

http://groups.yahoo.com/unbounce?adj=164271332,45769&p=115658

(You can also copy and paste this link into your browser, and hit the 'Return' key.)

Once you reactivate your Yahoo! Groups account by clicking the link above, you will receive messages from your group(s) again.

Tip: You can read messages you might have missed while delivery was turned off by visiting your groups here:

http://groups.yahoo.com/mygroups

Thank you for using Yahoo! Groups!

Hey now wait a minute, 85% is probably the absolute best he (SC) could do - thus making that the ceiling! So, if you make it 100% - he too wouldn't be licensed! DAMNED........... that would be a shame. :)

Yes Bob, quite legitimate, I get it fairly often as I am with Demon and their spam filtering picks up some of the spam and blocks emails from yahoo.
Just follow the unbounce link and reset it.

I'll bet copying a message by voice from someone with the cyrillic alphabet would end up a lot better results than copying the same message with cw.

Thanks for the heads-up on changes at sony. Is there a new premium name that one can rely upon for the best electronic products (without doing homework on each purchase)?

> broadcast video gear. People I would not let loose on a CD palyer. Their excuse was "hire from a diverse pool" but in reality that was not done. We called them 20-20's because they were 20 years old and made $20K/Yr -and they really had no concept of the fundamental theory behind most of the equipment they worked on. I mean these guys could not tell you the difference between a balanced and unbalanced signal, or why it was important. Service center managers expected us 'old' guys to train them, but the immaturity, laziness, and impatience of such folk won out as time and time again the rework would come back. Customers would say that Sony service was becoming no better than Panasonic's, a huge insult previously, but it became close to the truth. The profit sharing plan dried up as the hungry new 'hollywood' branch of the company, a gigantic business error, sucked up money faster than a new york coke prostitue. They were paying Michael Jackson's salary for a while too. It was a mess, and the spiral to destruction was not slow, and is probably now irreversible. I left Sony when they decided to consolidate alll service to one location and they offered me the "opportunity" to move to Norcross GA (Atlanta) and work in a 24-hour sweatshop, er.. hot-seat repair center. In the current center, I was in charge of a 12x30 area with three 7' racks, a desk, computer, phone, and workbench, with maybe $250K worh of test gear, and that is where I did my repairs. I worked on high end NTSC and HDTV digital broadcast and production products. Nothing I worked on cost less than $5000 and most of it was in the 20K range. That was the level of responsibility. The new place would have me coming in to a seat still warm from someone's butt every morning, sharing a drawer full of possibly nasty hand tools and maybe some potato chip crumbs, in a short workbench with no desk, no racks and only a couple pieces of test gear, working on cheap VHS or 8mm video tape recorders with two other people, and no computer or phone, all assholes and elbows, butts to nuts with 300 other people in the huge room, the hillbilly boss staring down from his loft on the second floor, deciding which slave to beat. (we sent spies in ahead to check on this) That is what they did to the service department and it is why Sony service sucks now and why the products are not what they were. I could go on, but there's no point. I think that was the best thing that Sony ever did for us experienced people, shutting down the regional service centers. Really gave our carreers a boost when we changed Jobs. Sony on your resume used to mean something then. I wonder if it does now?

I never thought of Sony as a premium name.

Onkyo makes nice stereos.

I would like to see Al try to copy Japanese CW.
Let's see, -.-.  --.-  would be "ni" "ne". Wonder what he would do with .-.--  and  --.-. ? :-)

Dear Fucken,

You're absolutely right. My apologies for inadvertently posting to YOUR group.

Thanks for your understanding and consideration...

Now, go back to your fucken newsgroup and enjoy yourself.

There are MANY reasons why ham may not be as popular. NO ONE reason is THE reason. Code sure isn't it. It didn't stop the many who desired a license from persuing it. If you want to do it - you will - simple as that. EFFORT is the name of the game!

> Slow Code wrote:

Many a fine CBer has moved up to Ham - and improved the hobby. CODE didn't keep the scum of the bands from operating there ON CB OR now in the Ham bands. SO - CODE IS NOT THE REASON.

With the way you've been talking - you (SC) couldn't even do 85%. SO, you'd be cutting yourself out.

I've said it before, I'll say it again - there are MANY things in life you MUST learn to get by, some by pure need or desire. You "LEARNED" to drive, had to study the rules of the road. You "LEARNED" how to do many other things - and I'm damned sure "studied" things in school - maybe even college or post high school to get to where you wanted to be - maybe took an exam for a job promotion. HAM is just one more thing to "learn". For Christs sakes, if you had EVERYTHING handed to you - it wouldn't be worth having. To JUST have a "DRIVER'S LICENSE" "GIVEN" to you - would produce havoc on our roads. To JUST GIVE AWAY "PILOTS LICENSES - would be devastating to many when they come crashing down. To JUST "GIVE" Radio Licenses away - regardless class or whatever - would produce havoc on the air waves. SOMEWHERE - there HAS to be SOME control.

ANYONE not willing to work for something - is PURE LAZY................. NO other way to put it. I suppose those of you whining and bitching - never had the pleasure of "satisfaction" KNOWING you "passed" a test by KNOWING the material - NOT having it given to you.

THIS isn't ALL JUST about code anymore - our whole freaking nation is dumbing down and that is SAD. AND it is getting to be a "lawless" society where no one cares anymore - they do as they damned well please. Be it on the telephone, radio, highway, waterways, in the air......... where ever - doing whatever - they're not supposed to be doing. Step on your neighbors rights but damned if they're to step on yours. That logic creates more troubles.

This sort of thread will continue as long as there are whiners who don't want to EARN a privelage - they want it "handed" to them. No wonder this country and/or world is so screwed up.

The point I was trying to make is that the amateur radio hobby matured about 3 decades ago. It's membership is aging rapidly and the number of active participants is declining.   As the baby boomer generation dies off at an increasing rate the amateur radio hobby will continue to fade away. Fiddling with the test requirements isn't going to magically entice younger blood away from the many other license-free ways of communicating. I would venture to say that you could open the ham bands completely CB style and not get a big jump in membership. There are just too many other interesting, easy to use ways of communicating that that younger people are accustomed to using. I wish it were otherwise.

Making the ham radio test more of a challenge as you suggest misses the point completely. The point is that there will be a diminishing number of people with any interest becoming a ham, no matter what the requirements are.

BULL SHIT? TRY a bit of effort in some of your spelling dude - your website sucks with misspelled words as do most of your posts.

EFFORT IS required in most anything in life - worth having. For some jack off who thinks we NEEDED this war - then why don't you MAKE AN EFFORT TO HELP FIGHT IT. Maybe if we're lucky, you'll be wiped out instead of a soldier who didn't need to be there.

Don't even bother replying jack off. You're barred from my screen.

How do I use the Quick Key function on the SC230?

Yesterday I joined 160,000 of my best friends at Bristol for the night race.
I took my new Uniden SC230 and my trusty old Radio Shack PRO-89.

Before leaving, I updated freqs on both scanners.  Also, I followed the instructions to set up Quick Keys on the SC230 -- go through the menu to a car number, set up a Quick Key for that car. I set up the following Quick Keys:

-- MRN-PRN Broadcast: 1
-- Jeff "Squeaky" Gordon: 2
-- Jr: 8
-- Fat Tony: 3
-- Jimmy J.: 4

I thought that all I had to do was hit the Quick Key and the scanner would go to that freq. Wrong. If I hit any of the keys I had set up, all the scanner did was "beep" for an error and keep on scanning. After about 30 minutes, I stuffed the SC230 into my backpack and pulled out the PRO-89 -- because the 230 is too much trouble to tune.

For example:

-- To go to a car on the 230: CAR>(Enter car #)>ENT>Scanner shows a freq>ENT and the scanner goes to the car freq. THREE button presses plus the car #.
-- To go to a car on the PRO-89: CAR>(Enter car #)>CAR and there it is -- TWO button presses plus the car #. And, if the car # has three digits, all you do is hit CAR>(Enter the car #) and the scanner goes to the freq -- ONE button press plus the car number. This is really convenient with MRN-PRN in the scanner as Car #100.

Still, the 230 would be much more convenient if all I had to do was press one button -- the Quick Key number -- and recall the car set on that Quick Key.

How do I make the Quick Keys recall a freq with a single key press??

Thanks.

As the baby boomer generation dies off at an increasing rate the amateur radio hobby will continue to fade away. Fiddling with the test requirements isn't going to magically entice younger blood away from the many other license-free ways of communicating. I would venture to say that you could open the ham bands completely CB style and not get a big jump in membership. There are just too many other interesting, easy to use ways of communicating that that younger people are accustomed to using. I wish it were otherwise.

You "could" be and may very well be right in that regard as to the numbers increasing or not if the bands were completely opened. But since most of this crap evolved around CODE and then the "learning" ability of "exam" material - those issues are not the <complete> problem. As I said, if you want to "learn" anything, effort is the key. All through our lives, we all have to LEARN "something" to make us who/what we are in life. You learn to do your job, even if it isn't from a text book. But, you have to admit - except for sweeping floors, pumping gas, washing windows, etc......... it DOES take "effort" to learn the tasks. Once you master them - then usually it is a piece of cake. "Learning" should never end for anyone - until their number is up here on earth.

In code, you learn ._ is "A". In driving - you learn to put your left turn signal on and then turn the wheel left - to make a left turn in your vehicle. In a factory or on a construction job - you learn hand signals to instruct a crane-man at a job site. Whatever it is - you learn "something" to get you by in life - be it a job, hobby or whatever. In most cases (except code) - NOT learning - could get you or others injured or killed.

I DOUBT - anyone jumped in a car the first day and went and passed their drivers exam - it took EFFORT to learn to drive (safely). I DOUBT anyone - jumped in a plane and passed their pilots test the first time in the plane - it took EFFORT. Even to pass a physical ability test for some jobs - TAKES EFFORT. Any SOLDIER or PRO or even high school/college athlete who has excelled - will tell you that.

To the screwball who said BULL SHIT to "effort" - he claims to be an EME user on his website. I'm DAMNED sure he didn't just wake up one day and decide to try EME - and be eh - fair(?) at it! SOMEWHERE along the line - it took EFFORT to acquire the knowledge, license and materials to do so. Too bad he doesn't make some "effort" to "spell" properly - MOST of his bull shit has been misspelled so poorly, he comes across as a tard. No wonder he gets picked on......... Misspelled words, "NEEDED" wars, etc.......... SHEESH. I misspell a word here and there once in a while in error - as do many others. BUT there are SOME who seem to KILL IT when it comes to spelling. They never heard of "spell check"? Can't even make effort to use THAT to make them look a bit brighter.

It doesn't matter how easy or hard the tests are - Code or NO Code - the point here in this thread and others similar is - it seems some want it "handed" to them and all I'm saying is EFFORT will help you get it and you'll be rewarded - your achievement - be it a license, an upgrade in license OR a job promotion with subsequent pay raise or position. So what if you never use the code again to save a life or just to chat on the air - who cares? To pass the muster for some promotions in the service, you have to prove physical ability, and some of those things needed to be done - you may never have to make use of again. Tell your senior officer you're not going to do it and see what you hear in return..........

IF YOU WANT IT BAD ENOUGH - YOU"LL DO IT. Of course - weinie boy who thinks effort is bull shit and believes we NEEDED wars - wouldn't have a clue. So the quiestion is now - did he cheat on his exam and had his license handed to him OR have the equipment donated to not have to make the EFFORT to acquire it all?

Opening up the bands won't be the answer to the "population" of the bands. IF I were God, had a Crystal Ball, I might be able to give the "exact" answer. I've "never" claimed to have it nor do I now. All I can say, is we know where we're headed and it will be interesting in say 5 years or so - to see how we do indeed end up. Changes "could" come about to revive it, open the bands up OR shut them down. Right now, they are somewhat protected by Vongress, but the Congress members are usually able to be bought out by special interest groups - so - NEVER SAY NEVER........... we could be sold out next year if enough of them get their heads together. Then - all of these threads will be moot points. Hell, we may end up paying to type/read this - over and above our ISP payment. There WAS a move to do so.........

Nothing to say it couldn't happen if someone tries it again.

L.

Being totally unfamiliar with this particular scanner - he "might" have a power supply issue of sorts. I had a radio come in the shop once with bulbs that kept blowing out - a previous tech did nothing other than replace the blown bulbs - three times - without trying to corrrect the issue. I placed a resistor in line and no more blown bulbs. The surge when turning the set on - apparently was more than the bulbs wanted to see - even though the readings from the power supply were "as spec'd". The set worked flawlessly otherwise and since. THAT set was the only one I had seen of that model that had that issue. I had known many who had the same model with no issues.

That could be a simple repair - without having to do any real mods.........

IF YOU WANT IT BAD ENOUGH - YOU"LL DO IT. Of course - weinie boy who thinks effort is bull shit and believes we NEEDED wars - wouldn't have a clue. So the quiestion is now - did he cheat on his exam and had his license handed to him OR have the equipment donated to not have to make the EFFORT to acquire it all?

Ok, what if you were stranded on a desert island, and had to use code to save someone's life?
Could you use the coconuts to build a radio in order to send said code?
And if you could build the radio out of coconuts, why not just build one with a mic and speak the miracle of life into being?

And ever so slowly we creep up on the actual point....

pick a freq, pick a mode, pick a language, pick a moment in time.
Nothing is perfect and CW or no CW, it's about circumstance, not code.
Then again, you can back it up one more and acknowledge the foolishness of the whole CW argument.
As it stands, hams are so crazy they somehow think they are the only hope for mankind.
I pray that farce never becomes fact!

Everything has it's place.
Ham radio is a novelty. CW is a novelty within the same. That's all....
As long as there are 40wpm ops out there that can't program a radio, it's just a bunch of ding-dongs arguing amongst each other, looking like a bunch of ding-dongs.
And it goes both ways.... no reason to ditch CW but this "my tapper is faster than your tapper" stupidity is just phallic and pathetic. Which finally brings us to the overall problem...
As usual, the last word in any hammy hashing is the same.
Control freaks needing to feel in control, and the subject matters not.
That's why these goofy threads carry on forever.

Well... no, I got the point just fine. I can't imagine being surrounded by Spanish-speaking people needing a code interp, or being on a CW freq anyway, while some emergency happens to be taking place. And yeah, I'm elite like that... I have a gift for gab... just like a monkey can be trained to tap out a code of communication, I can parrot what I hear. It [or 50wpm CW] isn't intelligence in any way, it's just a stupid circus trick. Once again..... this wasn't or isn't the issue anyway... No one said there were no pros to the mode, just that the whole "save a life" thing is laughable. This argument jumps from an issue of speed, then to the generation gap, then to simple name-calling banter. It's quite humorous and totally stupid. Kudos to the OP troll! LOL

Want to see interest in radio pique?? Open up a band specifically for unlicensed broadcasting. Not CB, not ham, but actual broadcasting. I can see tens of thousands rushing to get in on that one..

And for the millionth time, all you control/speed freaks just don't get it...... If I could take down a message in CW at 200wpm in High German, guess what? It'll take me hours to locate a German to translate it. SO..... shot down yet again, a big burning ball of fire falling from the sky beepin' SOS till ya hit the water right next to a burning boat...

Let's get back on point please. The question was if you had to use CW to save a life, would that person die?
The answer is simple. If the person in question knows CW, then no, and if the person in question doesn't know CW, then yes.
How hard is that? Why can't everyone keep to the issue?

The problem with young people anymore is that they don't communicate face to face.. if it's not on the phone, or some instant messenger, they don't communicate at all.

I can certainly write down Spanish spoken at my CW speed of 13 wpm which is the whole point. If one speaks faster, I may not be able to copy it. If one sends CW to me faster than 13 wpm, for sure I cannot copy it even in English.

Really? You listen to people speaking at 13 wpm? What are they on?
It sounds like good stuff.

   In all my visits to USAF bases I've never seen any CAP personnel there, let alone some in a poopy suit.  I've seen several civilians on USAF bases, employed by the USAF, wearing flight suits and clearly identified as to being civilian.

Oh, oh...in the PC (Political Correctness) of morsedom,
the code test cannot possibly ever be a "barrier."

ALL "good hams" should WORK for their AMATEUR licenses!

Those that won't are worse than river-bottom slime...:-)

Trying to speak logically, the FCC grants amateur licenses in the USA and even they proposed (via an NPRM) to eliminate the amateur radio morse code test for a license. FCC is on record of a couple decades ago that this singular manual skill test does not tell them if a license applicant is worthy of a federal license.

   That's also a symptom of anoxia...lack of oxygen used up in his bragging of what he did that never was...  :-)

   Tsk, all that work he does in trying to bluff us.  All he had to do was present SOME sort of document proof or even a personal snapshot taken while in that "hostile-action-filled" 18 year
   "career" in the USMC.  He hasn't done so after many years.

   If he can't present a single item of 18 years of his life, it is hard for the rest of us to believe anything he said.

Oh, my! :-)   Now comes the "outrage" from a wanna-be jar head.

I was thinking more of the image of Jar-Jar Binks having come to earth in Newington and invading the editors offices of QST.

[see the 4th "Star Wars" film to find out who Jar-Jar Binks is and morsemen should quit viewing "Independence Day" for the umpteenth time... :-)]

Ok.... and lose 99% of the available operators when another Katrina hits..... We needed ANYBODY that had a radio and a license for almost a month after the storm. My town took the direct hit from Katrina..... even though we are 60 miles north of the gulf, I still had 110mph sustained winds at my house.

Your objection was that I cannot write Spanish at 100 wpm.
I admit that but I know how to say "despacio" until they slow down so I can write it down. Since I can copy CW at 13 wpm, that seems to be a reasonable comparison.

flight suits and clearly identified as to being civilian.

Oh, oh...in the PC (Political Correctness) of morsedom,
the code test cannot possibly ever be a "barrier."

ALL "good hams" should WORK for their AMATEUR licenses!

Those that won't are worse than river-bottom slime...:-)

Trying to speak logically, the FCC grants amateur licenses
in the USA and even they proposed (via an NPRM) to eliminate the amateur radio morse code test for a license. FCC is on record of a couple decades ago that this singular manual

   skill test does not tell them if a license applicant is worthy of a federal license.

That's also a symptom of anoxia...lack of oxygen used up in his bragging of what he did that never was... :-)

Tsk, all that work he does in trying to bluff us. All he had to do was present SOME sort of document proof or even a personal snapshot taken while in that "hostile-action-filled" 18 year
"career" in the USMC. He hasn't done so after many years.

If he can't present a single item of 18 years of his life, it is hard for the rest of us to believe anything he said.

LenAnderson@ieee.org

Well, doggone it, Lennie. Next thing ya know he'll be posting over the callsign of another Amateur.

Nope...ya just cain't believe guys like that, can you Len?

Let's keep the CB'ers on CB.

1: No more automatic renewals. Individuals must retest and pass all elements required for their license class.

2: The passing score for written exams needs to be raised to 85%.

3: Code elements should be 13 wpm for General, and 20 wpm for Extra.

4: Make the no-code license one year non-renewable.

Tnx, 73

You'll lose some lazy ops, sure, but the operators that remain will be better.

As I said in another post, try that in Turkish. Or Latvian. Or any other language you don't know a single word of.

But in CW, it doesn't matter - you write the letters as they come, whether you know what they mean or not. In the Navy, we had to read what we had copied to know what it said - the CW came in your ear and went out your fingers, you didn't pay attention to it. English? Who knew, until you read it?

if you get a message in turkish in most of the USA you still have a useless message since where are yo going to find some that read the lang

I knew a SSgt that was also a Major. When he had on his Major Uniform, he strutted around escorting the JrCAPs to the chow hall to show them how it's really done.

But he's very visible, with or without that new suit of clothes.
Either way, it's bad for the morsemen.

He never thought that a mere Army or Air Force NCO would know anything about MARS.

Very, very unfortunate for him.

There is supposed to be a form of self-afflicted asphyxia but to talk of it wouldn't be polite.

Seven hostile actions, I'm told. I can't imagine being short-sheeted 7 times by members of my flight.

In the past, the company did very well, even though the products and service were costly they were of the highest quality. Once the founder, Mr. Morita, passed away, the company became very poorly managed -left to bean counters and lawyers who had no concept of the value of a tradition of quality products or service. They made sweeping changes they would not have dared to make while Morita-San was alive. Parts in machines that had previously been cast or machined became stamped. Machined brass or aluminum bosses holding mechanism guides and supports to a mechanism baseplate became molded-in nylon strips and thin sheets with little threaded and even -perish the though- press-fit bosses on them. Yes, press-fit metal into nylon. Service quality also became secondary to profit. That is, the service organization was no longer permitted to break even in order to provide high value service, and the profit-center model they implemented caused the quality of service to drop severely, even as they raised the hourly rate to $150 (broadcast) and cheaply hired inexperienced technicians right out of a 2-year course DeVry to work on broadcast video gear. People I would not let loose on a CD palyer. Their excuse was "hire from a diverse pool" but in reality that was not done. We called them 20-20's because they were 20 years old and made $20K/Yr -and they really had no concept of the fundamental theory behind most of the equipment they worked on. I mean these guys could not tell you the difference between a balanced and unbalanced signal, or why it was important. Service center managers expected us 'old' guys to train them, but the immaturity, laziness, and impatience of such folk won out as time and time again the rework would come back. Customers would say that Sony service was becoming no better than Panasonic's, a huge insult previously, but it became close to the truth. The profit sharing plan dried up as the hungry new 'hollywood' branch of the company, a gigantic business error, sucked up money faster than a new york coke prostitue. They were paying Michael Jackson's salary for a while too. It was a mess, and the spiral to destruction was not slow, and is probably now irreversible. I left Sony when they decided to consolidate alll service to one location and they offered me the "opportunity" to move to Norcross GA (Atlanta) and work in a 24-hour sweatshop, er.. hot-seat repair center. In the current center, I was in charge of a 12x30 area with three 7' racks, a desk, computer, phone, and workbench, with maybe $250K worh of test gear, and that is where I did my repairs. I worked on high end NTSC and HDTV digital broadcast and production products. Nothing I worked on cost less than $5000 and most of it was in the 20K range. That was the level of responsibility. The new place would have me coming in to a seat still warm from someone's butt every morning, sharing a drawer full of possibly nasty hand tools and maybe some potato chip crumbs, in a short workbench with no desk, no racks and only a couple pieces of test gear, working on cheap VHS or 8mm video tape recorders with two other people, and no computer or phone, all assholes and elbows, butts to nuts with 300 other people in the huge room, the hillbilly boss staring down from his loft on the second floor, deciding which slave to beat. (we sent spies in ahead to check on this) That is what they did to the service department and it is why Sony service sucks now and why the products are not what they were. I could go on, but there's no point. I think that was the best thing that Sony ever did for us experienced people, shutting down the regional service centers. Really gave our carreers a boost when we changed Jobs. Sony on your resume used to mean something then. I wonder if it does now?

Sorry, you first challenged me to do that in Spanish.

We don't really care at RAR+P, but I wondered when rec.radio.cb or he gets even less than you doc the CBer that want to use ham spectrum will (with or likely without a licnse depending on there motives and how ridicolous the license requiremnt are)

everything he can't control burns is ass the No Code techs the Cber's and even worse the part 15 experimental users

OK, that explains it. :-)   If I was on-site for some company business, I wouldn't be there on weekends. :-)

Any rational, sane person can't believe his claims. Hopefully, that is most of us reading some of the garbage going on in here now.

I found it uproarious that Robeson tried to cover up his NOT naming a single military radio that was operational during his alleged 18-year "USMC career," claiming "all the information is classified!" :-)

Absolute bullshit. The names, ID, functions have all been in public view...the 'Public' being the makers or those wanting to get in on an RFQ (Request for Quote) being advertised by the DoD. Even though I never operated (as a civilian) anything more than an old ARC-27 or PRC-119 SINCGARS, all the military radios operational between the times of those two are easily recognizeable to me (well, the VRCs have lots of differences between families but the same case and general form). The operating manuals are NOT classified, just in limited distribution. LOGSA the Logistics Supply Agency is busy making CDs of all the printed manuals for darn near ALL military equipment; it's a piece of cake to pop one of those CDs in an ever-present military PC and read them. LOGSA has a website and even civilians can download some of the older equipment's manuals. LOGSA has some internal priority on what can be downloaded (depending on the cookie generated by a non-military PC). That was a tip I got from rec.radio.amateur.boatanchors and rec.radio.amateur.homebrew. The nomenclatures and quick-look facts are on a couple websites in a long, long, long list. Even BAMA has some manuals for free download plus big link lists for other sites that have them.

Robesin DID list some (questionable) nomenclatures for MARS equipment once but NOTHING else. That kind of info can be had from other hams' personal websites. MARS doesn't normally talk about regular military tactical radio gear. MARS doesn't normally use such. :-)

I found it very amusing that this all went down with Sony on the same day that the IAU downsized the Solar System from 9 to 8 Planets.

: (I feel sorry for Pluto. : (

"RESOLUTION 5A"

The IAU therefore resolves that planets and other bodies in our Solar System be defined into three distinct categories in the following way:

(1) A planet is a celestial body that (a) is in orbit around the Sun, (b) has sufficient mass for its self-gravity to overcome rigid body forces so that it assumes a hydrostatic equilibrium (nearly round) shape, and (c) has cleared the neighbourhood around its orbit.

(2) A dwarf planet is a celestial body that (a) is in orbit around the Sun, (b) has sufficient mass for its self-gravity to overcome rigid body forces so that it assumes a hydrostatic equilibrium (nearly round) shape, (c) has not cleared the neighbourhood around its orbit, and (d) is not a satellite.

(...I know more than a few drunks at the local Am Legion Post who could qualify for the above after they've had a few shots and beers in them - grin)

I am lying?

Sure you have, you've added "alt.test" and a few other newsgroups to the headers. Google has all your posts where you've done so, liar.

Your words, not David's. You implied Spanish couldn't be copied with a mic by a non-Spanish speaking person.
I showed that it can be done.

Possibly, because try as I might, I can't really remember much about that day.... I had pyloric stenosis, if that counts?

> So apparently YOUR answer to this question is that you couldn't send your

Now that's true... I'd require a CW setup of some kind in order to send my name; or anything else for that matter.
Or as previously pointed out, hack up a headphone jack and tippy tap the wires together. Either way, I don't see my life depending on it at any time, so I'll just let my CW skills continue to rust.
However; your argument does make me wonder how non-hams even have a chance at life in this world... ??

OK.... so by your own words, CW still didn't save a life... CW mixed with bad Spanish passed a message. So now we'll have to add a Spanish test. Thanks a lot.

As for the language thing.... I can copy voice language and hand it off to another native just as easy and they'll figure it out too.
No CW necessary.

BTW, I noticed you conveniently left out the specific year in which said burning boat was offshore with an obsolete CW outfit, and how your CW expertise put out a fire.... but I'm guessing we're talking many a year ago, so again, a moot point.
Actually,
The boat thing in general is really killing me... If these numb-nuts are offshore and not on the correct USCG freqs and/or unaware of how to properly tune their radios in an emergency, then it isn't CW saving lives, it's the grace of God that somebody happened to be on their freq at that time. But again, what boats are out there with a CW rig???? That's crazy, bubba. :-)

Not an exact date, though it's probably in the archives of the Canadian Coast Guard, my employer at the time. Hey, I worked at Halifax Coast Guard radio from 1977 until 1995, 18 years at the one station. We handled a number of SOS calls on CW and were able to save lives some of the time (not always. alas). But with trained operators on both ends of the signal path, CW was pretty much always an easier go than SSB. And SITOR was pretty much a joke. Half the ships couldn't get it going.

INMARSAT is what put CW out of business in the marine industry. And a nasty solar flare or two could put INMARSAT out of business. You pays your money and you takes your chances. I'm not sure that a ship equipped with a complex satellite radio with a lot of moving parts and a technician is all that much better off than a ship was when they were equipped with an MF-HF CW and SSB radio station and a radio operator who was also a trained technician. All is well until something breaks and the nearest part is 500 miles away over water.

CW was still in use for a some ship-to-shore work when I retired in 1995.

When I went to the high arctic in 1964 it was our main means of communication with the south. We eventually converted that to RTTY and SSB, but neither was really as effective as the CW that preceded.

Now, today, we have such things a PSK31 to do much of the grunt work. That will work as well as CW in most cases, I find.

My point is, my bad Spanish might not have recognized the word "fuego" if it was spoken fast among a lot of other words. But on CW it came across loud and clear.

Except you'll be a lot slower because you'll need phonetic spellings for everything. Believe me, I know. I've done this. For a living for many years.

Not that long ago, really. Early 1990's if I remember.

This was on 500khz (and 484). CW was the mode of operation on those frequencies until well into the 90's. Cheap SSB radios were plentiful.
So were some SITOR lashups. But what finally killed it was INMARSAT.

So now, instead of getting nailed by solar flares on HF, you get nailed by them on INMARSAT and have to wait 6 to 9 months for a new launch.
Meanwhile you're limping along on SSB using a phonetic alphabet to send traffic at a SLOWER rate.

I think you missed the point. Even if you didn't know "ola" from "adios", you can copy Spanish in CW and hand it to the recipient, who can read it. Try that with a mic.

Really? You can write a spoken language you don't understand well enough to be read by someone who understands it? Maybe. Maybe not.
In CW, you can.

It sounds like you want to be a ham so you will be welcome.

The point that some people are trying to make is that attracting people who do not want to be hams is rather pointless. They'll be talked into getting a license by some overzealous person telling them how easy it is and then will end up not participating because they don't have an interest in it.

Don't forget thought that solar flares and especially the aurora they create induce a phase shift in signals and that wipes out PSK31.

I do that firaly well as long as it is a a langauge fro gruop I know I can take down serbian in crylllic even though I don't what they are saying it is simply a skill For that matter I hear and resend Morse as long as I don't try to decipher it

YOU can and you then claim that you have that skill it is valid your values in the ARS refuse to accept that notion different strokes for different folks

If instead of CW testng we had a choice a various tests to take that would stand muster the current value Morse well outside of it value withut even realy testing its abilty to do a QSO were the test based sending and receiveing where the receiveing could send bak pse senf all after ... and before what then take a test to show that he was able to comincate the test would have more vailiity but it doesn't the CW tests do noy even show that the testee can use CW over the air

Markie, Thanks for the re-post.

You saved my the trouble of having to post it this month.

You would have a scanner if it weren't for hams.  Ever tune 144-148 or 420-450?  Good stuff Maynard.

Most of the time it's best to use the standard phonetics: alpha, bravo, charlie, delta, echo, etc....

But in some situations, using an alternate phonetic set will make your message much more clear & accurate, so it's better to use the alternate phonetics when clearity and accuracy is paramount.

For example, using 'Anal Boy Ate Multiple Queers' for AB8MQ, is much more clear and accurate.

   That certainly seems the case.  The "uniform" is his emperor's new clothes...

All of those "layers" hams are examples to the general public, good or bad or indifferent. So?

"Self-esteem" is a nice-nice word for EGO tied in with self-perception. Trying to represent themselves as "expert" radio persons in this new millennium is a rather stupid idea of those devout morsepersons when they want to force the FCC to keep the code test.

Those who LIKE morse code should, and can, go on using it. That is in no sense any validity for making it an amateur radio test requirement for a license.

It's easy to "get." He wasn't what he says he was. He hasn't supplied a single bit of evidence to prove his claims.

He tries to "spin" his claims to be the truth. Still no evidence presented.

Robesin used the wrong word/acronym for a RESUME' presented as part of an interview for a job.

Some of those he makes up as he goes along.

He's hardly worked in radio.

Why do you ask these questions on an antenna newsgroup?

Spanish words are easy to write even if one doesn't understand them. In general, unlike English, there is usually only one possible way to pronounce and to spell a Spanish word. You hear "a-di-os". You write a-d-i-o-s. You don't need to know what it means.

Lessee. He's got a Marine uniform (he says). A Tennessee State Guard uniform (whatever that is), an ill-fitting Air Force CAP flight suit uniform, and a male nurses uniform. And he has lots of military medals that he never earned (according to him).

You know, whenever I saw folks in the CAP uniform at any Air Force Base, including Maxwell, they work the 4b or Class A. Never ever saw a CAP in a flight suit before robesin's well advertised home page.

Some do. Some don't. robesin does.

No valid reason to maintain it as a barrier to the ARS.

Oh, I don't know.  After a hard day behind the microphone, he's got that 1,000 yard stare.

Ever try taking dictation at 100wpm spoken speed in a foreign language?  I have.  Even in one I understand, it's difficult.  In one I don't understand it's impossible.  Maybe you're better than I am.

When it's spoken very quickly and in a panic, it's more like "adhyose".  Understandable, if weird looking, to a Spaniard.  Try some other languages, though - those you've never heard spoken before.  See how well you do.  Then see how well you do in CW ... oh, you already know that, don't you?  -.-. is the same, whether it's hard, soft or unpronounced.  Whether you put a cedilla on it or not, a Spaniard will understand it.  So will a Turk, even though it sounds more like - -.-.
But would you write "Con"  for something that sounds like Tchonn?

Markie, Just ignore them.

They only tease you because of the stupid things you say when you follow up.  Just ignore them and they'll give up.

Stop giving them reasons to tease you.  It only makes you look more stupid.

Maybe if you ask the average lame clueless bastard in the US. Shortwave and amateur radio are alive and well and flourishing in other parts of the world. Indeed, in many countries SW is still the system of choice to cover a wide area.

It gets worse. Go to the QRZ bio page for K4YZ and use his link to his AOL Home Page. There he claims not only an Assistant "CHOP" (presumably CHief OPerator) but as THE CHOP of another MARS station! He'd never mentioned being at that 2nd MARS station in here.

Yeah, but look at the MASSIVE outpouring of his claims, insults, and generally vague, undetailed personal history of his. Whoever takes it on will probably need a dozen file cabinets to store all the printouts!   :-) well there Is Robeson and Wismen Heil is better than them but.. How many example does one need?

right now the sample rate isn't very good of Extras that are not given your non disclosed call status you certainly don't count

Hi,

I was looking for scanner frequencies in my home area and found a site were you can get scanner frequencies for anywhere in the country (United States). I did have to pay a small fee, but it was well worth it. I got hundreds of frequencies from everything imagiable.

There site states they have Frequencies for business, police, sheriff, air force, airports, ambulance, army, civil defense, constables, disaster services, firefighters, forests, harbors, highway partrol, hospitals, house authority, lifeguards, marines, national parks, navy, paramedics, police, resue, school buses, sheriff, transit systems, troopers, aircraft, alarm companies, amusement parks, casinos, collges, conventions, country clubs, farm cooperatives, hotels, mail security, movie crews, newpapers, private investigators, public utilites, race crews, railroads, resorts, ski areas, sports events, stadiums, state fairs, taxis, towing.

I got alot of those with my order.

They even sell police scanners if you haven't already picked up one by now.

Must be in good working condition. Box and manual would be nice, but not needed. Let me know price and condition.

IOW, you're not really a serious scanner enthusiast. Maybe if someone sent you the key to Fort Knox you could afford to rent enough clues to be clueless.

EVERYTHING DIES

I also hear the buggy whip industry is doing pretty lousy except in Lancaster, PA.

Tsk, tsk, tsk, anony-mousie "Jawod," that LID is doing the "slamming," not I. :-)

Why are YOU so upset, "Jawod?" You don't exist. You are a mere figment of your own imagination. The FCC doesn't license figments...

>Perhaps that same psych >grad student has some prime real estate closer to (your) home?

Which home? The one in California or the one in Washington (state)? :-)

As far as the southern home is concerned, its address has been printed with every article I had published in HAM RADIO magazine. It's still the same address.

No problem on "knowing psych" people. Graduates...of USC, (University of California) of UI (University of Illinois), of University of Wisconsin at Madison. "Students?" Not greatly acquainted with any, only their instructors. My wife has two Masters Degrees, one of which required a thorough education in mental health...and she was licensed in two states for private practice.

"Jawod," what you just attempted to do was INTIMIDATE through suggestion. Old, old BLUFF. Didn't work, of course, but you just had to try the bully game, didn't you? :-)

That bluff-intimidation ploy has been used for years and years on BBSs and Internet...almost always by those too cowardly to reveal their true identity. [few of us would be "scared" if we found out how you REALLY are...] Try not to be such a blatant bullshitter in the future, OK?

Beep, beep and bye-eeee...

ARRL views itself as "representative" of the ARS. Unfortunately, the 'ARS' stands for Amateur Radiotelegraphy Society.

Yes and no. When it comes to Status-Rank-Privilege the fear of LOSS of those seems to take on a life of its own. They are SOMEBODIES at present, complete with federally-authorized permission and certificates (suitable for framing) to "prove" that. Take away the status, the rank, and perhaps privileges and they are (in their own perception) "lesser beings." That seems to work with the normal prime survival rule in humans.

Positive feedback (pro-code type) allowed. Negative feedback is "dishonest." :-)

Klein, armed only with an air of self-importance and inflated claims of experience, is shooting from the lip.

IF and only IF such a "practical test" were imposed, the time of testing EACH license applicant would increase dramatically. VEs would have to spend at least a day's worth of time on each applicant. I think VEs would object to such enforced labor in a Volunteer task.

As with other proponents of a "practical test," Klein hasn't explained WHO will maintain the equipment necessary for such "practical tests" nor make up the much-more-complicated test tasks and grading. Who will pay for the equipment that would cover "everything" as to modes and operations? The FCC? The VECs? Who will pay the VEs for their (essentially) "jobs"?

Klein assigns an importance and ability of AMATEUR activities in radio far higher than professional ones. This is wrong, but it serves his and other pro-coders self-image of being "better" because they passed tests lobbied-for by those of the same mindset.

>If the league pushes the morse testing issue too hard, it will become >obvious to the 25% that are members.

   I don't think so. The Amateur Radiotelegraphy Society is very firmly SET in their ideas of keeping the "heritage" and "tradition" of being a living museum of archaic radio. Those firm believers and worshippers at the Church of St. Hiram are disciples and they haven't had their last supper yet.

   That's a draconian sort of realism...but, unfortunately true.

   Believers can be extremely stubborn. "The only way you'll stop morse code is to pry my code key from my cold, dead fingers" isn't an idle threat. Morsemen as SOMEBODIES and they will hold that banner high even as they crumble.

   Self-inflation of importance, meaningless in reality.

That shows they are only whining, not thinking. In order to preserve their self-image of importance they have to continue whining on how they are so self-important. If they REALLY CARED about their sacred amateurism they would get busy and work at preserving things. Perhaps mumifying instead of preservation...

It is, but they are self-important because of a singular skill test that makes them "better" than others..."better" in ways not even remotely connected to that singular skill test.

Nah...Bill G. QUIT Harvard "to pursue other interests." :-)

He could probably BUY Harvard now...and have lots more left in his petty-cash box. :-)

Oh, yeah, and Bill Gates is PRO-CODE! Only problem for hams is that the "code" isn't morse but programming code... :-)

It is TRUE according to the ARRL's own history. But, they've written it (cleverly) so that it LOOKS like some kind of noble thing that "wasn't cheating anyone." :-)

Heh heh, I wouldn't doubt it...   :-) [via "giant meteor bounce?" ... off the earth, that is? :-)]

I thought Robesin had put on his (invisible) USMC uniform and was busy pounding brass with the USCG offshore from Beirut to evacuate US civilians? :-)

So many people need to pump themselves up here. Truly amazing.

I have no interest in your wife's degrees, your home(s), your friends or anything else. Nor was any "bluff" intended.

My post was in response to the quote above. If that wasn't you, my apologies. It was a simple statement.

Whew. Sometimes accessing this group is like stepping in dogshit.

At the Anderscum residence, perhaps.

For the nearly 700,000 of us with licenses, it's the Amateur Radio Service.

Note: Leonard H. Anderson is not an FCC licensee in that service.

You would know, Lennie...

It's YOU that perceives that loss...For by taking the same test mere mortals do, you "surrender" your "I Was An Electronics Engineer" brags.

Snip of usual Anti-Amateur Radio rhetoric.

Thankfully OUR "last supper" will come long, LONG after yours, Lennie...

"Armageddon"...?!?!

No one announced "armageddon" in any release that I am aware of.

Why did you?

Yet more evidence of why it's better to have Lennie "Can't Pass An Exam" Anderson on the outside looking in.

I know you're right.

Mark butts into treads that aren't even about him with his 'cease and desist' and all his other unintelligible mis-spelled crap. Then when he gets flamed back or called a tard over it, he thinks it's a personal attack. Mark just needs to learn to keep quiet and let the hams talk radio.

I'm trying to help him by reminding him to not butt into threads and to ignore attacks so those of us that care about ham radio can get back to discussing the radio issues that will protect and help preserve the service.

Mark's posts make it tough to discuss radio issues because everyone is to busy laughing at him they forget the issue. He has even got the AUK goof-balls teasing him now.

Maybe that's Marks plan. To disrupt the radio groups so we Can't discuss issues needed to save ham radio.

He did say he wanted to be the first no-code Extra.

Usenet radio groups were a lot nicer before ham radio got dumbed down. Now the ham radio groups have a CB feel to them.

Some old time ham in the area needs to step in and show the scouts how ham radio and CW can save lives and help communities in emergencies.

Nickle Generals & Extra's have a hard time promoting amateur radio. All they want to do is promote dumbing it down more. It's no wonder the scouts aren't interested.

ROFLMAO!

.... And you've made me think of possibly joining CAP.

Testimonials like yours will bring a smile to every Real hams face. :-)

Just learn the code to 22 wpm. That would be a nice edge if you still had to take a 20 wpm CW test. But if you can only get your speed up to 16 or 17 words per minute, upgrade anyway. We need good people like you on the ham bands and on usenet.   LOL

Markie, Just ignore them.

They only tease you because of the stupid things you say when you follow up.  Just ignore them and they'll give up.

Stop giving them reasons to tease you.  It only makes you look more stupid.

Take a break from the radio groups for a while,  Maybe work on your moon bounce some more or clean up your yard.

yes I wish to may well not make it but likely in the first big group of them

nothing wrong with having goals esp when those gaols in the ARS revolve around saving it from the death you want to inflict on it

5. No more "multiple guess" code test. One minute solid copy with lots of numbers, punctuation, and intentional misspellings

6. No more VE sessions. Re-establish testing at FCC Field offices, and train test administrators in the mold of Jules Finkelman.

7. No more pass the theory one day, the code another day. If you expect to be a ham, you should know both the same day.

8. No more transceivers. Separate receivers and transmitters, preferably with tubes, that you have to tune separately. For first year of license, crystal transmit frequency control only.

9. Fill in the World Trade Center hole, re-establish the old grid of streets, and re-establish radio row on Courtlandt Street.

As the little munchin said in the Wizard of Oz - opening up the window to Dorothy's insistent knocking - and she finally got her point across - "well now - that's a horse of a different color - why didn't you say so!"

The ARRL is trying to soften their image - the latest QST shows a person using a, gulp, microphone on the FRONT cover!

Just inside is yet another article on building a code key - from a door hinge.

This just in from The ARRL Letter, Vol. 25, No. 33, August 18, 2006

"ARRL First Vice President Kay Craigie, N3KN, represented the League at the Global Amateur Radio Emergency Communications Conference 2006."

"Craigie stressed that Amateur Radio needs to avoid "being dazzled by our own press clippings into thinking that we are the big dog in emergency telecommunications.""

She refers to robesin-like attitudes within the ARS.

Hi Guys,

First, I'd like to recommend that you become a member of the Pro95 Yahoo group.

Secondly, I'd also like to recommend that you use the wonderful F-R-E-E software for the Pro 95 by logging onto Don Starr's website:
http://www.starrsoft.com/

It looks very complex, if you've never used it before. I was a newbie too at one time. I made some mistakes, but I know just how much I missed by not using Don's software.

If you get lost or stuck, we are all there at the Yahoo group to help you.  We were newbies once too...

Alain

The council of VECs has already eliminated the multiple choice test.  Now it's fill in the blank or get solid copy.

Did someone drop you on your head at birth? The reason 50wpm can save lives is probably a bit complex for you to get both your functioning neurons around, but believe me, having done CW for a living for some decades I do know that it can save lives. And if you're faster than the average bear at it, you can tell someone on the scene things they need to know all that much faster.

So apparently YOUR answer to this question is that you couldn't send your name if your own life depended on it.

Believe me, I get it. I don't think CW ought to be mandatory and it isn't where I live. I do think people who intend to use it should learn how to use it properly, though. For CW to be effective, both operators must be competent. IF they are, they can often transcend barriers of language that only digital modes can get over. In my own case, the fact that I could read CW and read written Spanish a bit once enabled me to render aid to a burning fishing boat. (There were other more routine examples of where the language barrier was crossed by CW--many messages I copied were not in English at all, but were readable by their end recipients).

If it doesn't have rank or a uniform, Robesin isn't interested.

Yet as "chief operator" or ANCOIC of NMC MARS on Okinawa, he remains woefully ignorant of MARS. I just don't get it.

Maybe he meant "constant velocity" as in "CV joints" because he's always "spun up" about one thing or another.

Robesin an academic? Not in this lifetime.

It's just his inappropriate use of what to him are important sounding words and acronyms.

The rec.radio newsgroups have showcased Robesin. He HAS earned his reputation. He's worked very hard for it.

Yep, im british.

I can see your point about the FCC complaints, lack of funding is the usual reason for them not to bother to go after ham violators. If they charged users then they would be able to use that money to go after the retards who clog todays airwaves...

And the flamers/trolls havent driven us all off, we just go into hiding until we see something of interest, and just ignore the rest...

indeed but you can't discuss any changes as I suspect you have ntoiced and for that matter I have never seen why we have to have all of us geting our license by the same path indeed I have always liked an idea with some folks talking a rule and safety test (and being confined to built equipment) and pay a fee while others would takerigourous test and no fees

So basically ur saying that you should be able to either

1=2E Pay for your license and Take a beginner test (to prove your competent)

or 2=2E Take a Intermediate Test and get free license after passing

If this is what you mean, then i can see your logic and i would fully support a system like this...

Only problem is that just like Slow Code and the other trolls who try to change the Ham world, we wouldnt be able to do anything either, its down to the corporations, not us little people...

Oh. My. God. ! ! !

Tsk, just because NBC, CBS, ABC, CNN, FOX, ESPN, and PBS haven't covered the tremendously fantastic wonderfullest huge contribution to saving lives and property via ham radio? Gosh, there are all sorts of clippings from obscure weekly and biweekly newspapers dutifully cut-and-pasted into messages here from Robesin & Co.

Maybe I'll have to write the Department of Defense and say that "Major" Robesin said that radio amateurs run MARS! They should fortwith cease and desist publishing DoD Directives on thinking that they started it and keep running it!

Maybe I missed the "news" on the Home and Garden Channel...I don't watch that much...

Right and all the other radio services are switching to morse code for all emergency communications a la ham radio...the sky has truly fallen!

>didit!

Dahdah comrade. :-)

Give up on Robesin, Mark. He MUST remain "right" and He "must" rule. He isn't interested in civility. Once an "enemy" of his, always an enemy in his mind. Sick way to be but he is that way, repeatedly. He just proved it in the message you replied to.

He is setting the example for all hams. Not going to help the amateur ranks in getting more hams but that is not, apparently, his point. Robesin needs to come out on TOP in his own mind, be chieftan, be the warlord.

He also wants rec.radio.amateur. policy all his own to do with as he sees fit. [probably to have his daily fits in...]

> but titles like that are Robeson stock in trade my content in his posts > just ranting on and on about epople instead of Issues

Absolutely true, Mark. He tries to belittle his "enemies" so that He looks good. Problem is, it is working in reverse and he is only belittling himself.

well maybe I am naive but if Ham could get it together to support something different that was not hard to run (from the FCC's point of view) I suspect we would get it

Why? Is Amateur Radio a memory test? Make it a lifetime license and reduce the FCC's workload.

> 2: The passing score for written exams needs to be raised to 85%.

Why not 100%? Are you saying it's ok to screw up 15% of your operating?

> 3: Code elements should be 13 wpm for General, and 20 wpm for Extra.

Why should anyone be tested for code proficiency if they don't plan to use it? I can see testing for basic knowledge (dit dah = A), but why any particular speed? Should people be tested for speed talking before using voice modes?

> 4: Make the no-code license one year non-renewable.

All licenses should be no-code. Does the FCC test for speaking ability?

I don't think you have thought this through very well. Go take a nap and come back after some extended cogitating.

I have been into Shortwave and Police communications since the days of putting crystals into my 8 channel regency scanner from Montgomery Wards.

I am 41, college educated, and technically savy. Today I am going to go and take my license to be a certified Technician no code ham. So far every test I have taken online I have achieved a passing score without doing any studying other that the knowledge I have accumulated over the past 30 years of being a shortwave, military comm, and police comm listener.

I hope that others in the hobby do not have the same attitude that you possess and are favorable to me being new to the hobby (I am a bit shy out the gate but warm up quickly).

The fact that the fcc has made this test so much more attainable is a good thing because it invites those (like myself) who decide to join this hobby as a result of the test being passable with a basic understanding of the radio spectrum and laws of using the spectrum for which you are licensed to use.

More people available to be a part of the hobby is a good thing. So why would you want to try to weed them out?? Almost sounds like you are being a bit of a radio snob.

Just my 2 pennies worth.

Does anybody know what is different about the Duke University (Durham, NC) trunking radio system?

For several years I've kept a scanner on my desk, set to pick up 123.050, the standard helipad frequency, and talkgroup "496" on Duke's trunked system, which is .. or WAS .. the air helicopter channel. No big deal, but I can see all but the last 100 yards of their approaches from my window, and having the scanner on lets me know when to look up and see an approach or departure.

Until today, that is--this Monday morning, 8/21, the Duke trunked traffic is still coming in--but the IDs have changed. Instead of "496" and "1360" as talkgroup IDs, I'm seeing 0001-7 and 0000-10 and numbers like that. And I can no longer hear just the helicopter group--I'm getting EVERYTHING, requests for clean linen in this room, shuttle vans, etc. I have been too busy to do much research but it seems like more than one service/area/whatever may be using the same (strange new) numbers. I can program the Pro-94A to hear just "496" in the old system--but this new system, whatever it is, is still a mystery to me.

Is this connected with the "rebanding" I keep hearing about? Does anyone have an explanation of what has changed that is simple enough for even me to understand?

TIA!

When are you leaving the group to go do that, "Slow?"

Oh, and while you're at it, why don't you inform the group the date when amateur radio morse code saved ANYONE's life? Betcha can't do it...

On 7 July 2006 the FCC released its Independent Panel report on the worst natural disaster to hit the USA, Hurricane Katrina. You can find it in the Federal Register of that date. In there you can find an objective report on how much radio amateurs helped their communities.

BTW, Comments on that Report are due on or before 21 August 2006...today. Have you sent in your Comment, "Slow?" No?

>Nickle Generals & Extra's have a hard time promoting amateur radio. All Tsk, if anyone was doing "dumbing it down more," they'd have to outdo your own retrograde, freeze-it-in-YOUR-youth ham radio, "Slow." Feel proud. You are practically a one-ham show on dumbing down the service...

>It's no wonder the scouts aren't interested.

Tsk, you should have recited your own tale of saving the Titanic...when you were asleep on the US California...

Privatization of license testing happened BEFORE the Internet went public and creation of amateur radio newsgroups in what many still call "USENET." With privatization of testing came the open question pools.

"Slow," you are very confused on your dates and what happened.

It's "minority rule" when ARRL lobbies for preservation of morse code test for any amateur radio license class. The ARRL membership is slightly less than a quarter of all US amateur radio licensees.

Ahem...my reference was the old fairy tale, "The Emperor's New Clothes." :-)

That's the one where a full-of-himself ruler ordered some new clothes and the tailor buttered him up (while not sewing any new clothes) so much that the Emperor bought into this pandering to his ego and appeared in public with his "new clothes" (he was naked). Needless to say, the public laughed and laughed at this ridiculous spectacle.   :-)

Robeson has been all full of himself in here about his alleged "USMC service" yet he has presented zero-point-zero evidence from anyone else (or any legitimate agency) that he ever served on active USMC duty for any of his claimed "18 years."

Even though he NOW thinks of himself AS the amateur radio service personified (anything against him is somehow against ALL radio amateurs), he is still parodying the "Emperor."

Isnt that the main point tho.... they have no power to do anything...

They are just sad ppl with nothing better to do. Next they will be saying that you should have to pay a monthly fee to use the airwaves...

Maybe have a subscription fee, that would stop most of the scum (yeh right)

What part of the GMRS license would be a better filter?

The 5 year duration between renewals, the $75/=A340 charge or just the general way of applying for it?

Im not saying i disagree, just wondering what you meant..

having to pay to use the ARS freqs might be more of a deterant to those with bad attiudes than a code test not to say it would be a good filter but fee for license with the license fee used for enforcement here in the state the license is free (the tests cost something) and the FCC is always complaining it laks any funding to go after ham violators I suspect you are a brit and so this might escape you I should have been clearer nice to see someone serious paying attention here I had assume the flamers and trolls had driven them off

It sounds more like you hitting the wrong button on your scanner.
You're seeing the talkgroups in a different format, and you're hearing all talkgroups, not just the ones you programmed in.  Not knowing which scanner you have, there's no way to tell what to do to put it back.

=====================================

In these days of mobile telephones, etc., morse code just gets in the way of emergencies.

But there's nothing to prevent people who appreciate and love the language of Morse, the way it sings, its universality, its beauty, from continuing to use it way into the future.

It is the beauty of Morse, in plain English, never mind the abbreviations, which boy scouts and others who show an interest should be taught to appreciate.

The same is true of sailing ships, hot-air balloons, and horses. Do what turns you on and leave the @#$%&$ federal government out of it.

It was a CQD actually.... but the point is, the ham immediately alerted the Frankfurt, Olympic, Carpathia, et al and told them to go save lives! Being simple Marconists however; they all said
'no' so the ham grabbed his portable radio trunk, strapped a J-38 to his leg, jumped into his skiff and madly paddled 46 hours straight out to the stricken ship, all the while tapping out rescue coordination efforts with his elbow, and.... wait... I forget, where does it go from there?

I like watching gleaming reciprocating stationary steam engines with 8 feet diameter flywheels.  They turn me on too.  The government doesn't interfere.  But there's not many about these days.  ;o(

Turbines leave me cold!

The Titanic knew their coordinates.... didn't slow the influx of H20....
The responding ships had radios too... didn't turn their props any faster....

Answer to the question.... there was no system then.
CW can punch through if there is a human on the other end, where GPS/packet says 'no signal'....
GPS is faster, where CW takes longer....
so one is obsolete, the other inferior.

Good Lord, are you saying that a 1 jigawatt transmitter and an Infinity times Pi speed ham operator couldn't telepathically float a swamped ship, and thwart hypothermia of people in the water???
How crass.

Hey, if an alien force ever invades our planet and demands that we pass a 40wpm code test or they will annihilate the planet, then yes, it would!
Never say never.

ps:
Yeah, all is see on these groups is stupidity... might as well enjoy it.
:-)
no offense to the OP's here.... just making a generalized statement about this whole thread and others like it.

Wow.... so you could almost say the reason there was such a disaster [notwithstanding the time period and simple circumstance] is that all these radio operators [and companies] were acting like a bunch of egotistical morons, each thinking their way to be better, and that most vessels communications, wireless ops and policies were almost............. amateur.......... in nature?

LOL...

And I say I agree with the problem that mentioned for the cw being needed and life saving station for the pc with no code.
It'll never work and if it does it will only be working a pc and if that is not the person then it is not the same so you can say it didn't work anyway because it wasn't a person that needed it.
So there.

Well there ya have it folks.... 50wpm saves lives. So how does it work? Turn up the speaker really loud and place it [face down] on the person's chest, while an op in South America tapped out universally accepted words that would mimic an atrioventricular rhythm?

Wrong theatre? OK...

Maybe if a person is trapped on a sinking ship in the Indian Ocean you, in Siberia, could tap out a message to someone in Madagascar [who happened to be awake at an odd hour] and that person also owned a large SAR chopper, they could jump in it, saving the time of relaying to anyone else, and go pluck them from certain death?

OH, or better yet... if your neighbor is also a ham.... and your wife fell over with an AMI, you could call your neighbor, give him a freq, then the two of you get set up and running, then you can send a 50wpm message asking your neighbor to call an ambulance? BTW, if the phones are down, you ask him to get in his car and drive down to the local EMS agency, and bring them to you. Life saved!
I'm impressed.

Yep, and a single point mentioning that if it were anything other than a simple hobby, your arguments would matter.

But since it isn't...

Won't work.... memorizing is learning. You know where you live because you memorized it. You know what a diode is because you read it somewhere. Reading a book or taking a class on radio would require you retain [memorize] what you are told or read.

The information on radio should be kept secret, and the real test would be this:
Here's a radio. Take it with you. Come back in 30 days and explain how it works.

Then you get your owner's license, and can buy a radio.

Next test is to listen on-air to the CW [as there is no reason to use phone, if you already speak a language.] and figure out the code without any text or charts.

Then you get your operator's license.

When you can do that, then you can act like you've accomplished something.

The year was 1912...NINETY-FOUR YEARS AGO.

>Answer to the question.... there was no system then.

The predecessor organization for SOLAS had not yet made 500 KHz the international distress and safety frequency. "SOLAS" is an acronym for Safety Of Life At Sea.

>CW can punch through if there is a human on the other end, where GPS/packet >says 'no signal'....
>GPS is faster, where CW takes longer....
>so one is obsolete, the other inferior.

The International Maritime Community settled the 'morse issue.' They DROPPED it in favor of GMDSS (Global Marine Distress and Safety System), a semi-automated system which can be operated by anyone of the bridge crew on a ship (it needs little instruction on use). GMDSS messages are automatically routed to ground stations (note plural) via satellite relay. Those ground stations can coordinate rescue missions.

A shipboard GMDS station doesn't HAVE to have a GPS receiver to feed it position data but all those which have one have no complaint about this alleged "loss of signal." Position data can be entered manually to a GMDS station. The bridge crew will have a running record of the ship's position in either event.

The United States Coast Guard has DROPPED continuous monitoring of the 500 KHz distress frequency some years ago. Several other countries have done so.

A following question is WHO will you believe on the efficacy of communications? The entire international maritime community or a bunch of myth-happy amateur morsemen?

In a sentient, intelligent mind, ANY form of communications is good for use in matters involving life and death. The FCC thinks (rightly) so and says as much in Part 1 of Title 47 C.F.R. [Part 97 is not the entirety of regulations on amateur radio in the USA]

It happened NINETY-FOUR YEARS AGO.

I have to fault Cecil's erudite and intelligent mindset on that...although his motor looks good in his picture. :-)

One CANNOT base any intelligent argument about ALTERNATE universes of different times and places. It hasn't happened in our present time-space continuum.

In 1912 "radio" was in its infancy, having been first shown and demonstrated as a communications medium just 16 years prior. There were extremely few ships which had vacuum tubes as active devices to aid those first "radios." The tube was only 6 years old, the triode invented in 1906.

To argue about "GPS" (which is not an integral part of GMDSS but can be) versus morse code is ludicrous. GPS relies on a time-frequency standard within each of the 24 GPS satellites which is comparable to the best time-frequency source at NIST. [the quartz crystal oscillator wasn't yet invented in 1912] Each satellite needs solid-state circuitry to make it function within a relatively small package. [the best "solid-state" device of 1912 was a galena crystal detector with its famous "cat's whisker"] The whole GPSS needed rocketry advanced enough to put all the satellites into orbit. [rocketry wasn't perfected for that purpose until after WW2] Those rockets needed launch guidance aided by radar systems. [radar, or rather a primitive system of it, wasn't tried until 1932 in a harbor area of France]

However, "morse code" was used in the landline Morse-Vail Telegraph System working before the American Civil War and simple enough to turn a spark transmitter on and off as on the Titanic.

> > Which system is presently inferior and virtually obsolete?

On-off keyed CW.

Except in the mindset of the ARRL. The IARU knows better.

Robesin is merely a product of the "incentive" licensing system where all those who hunger for being a "somebody" can get a Title - Rank - Privilege through a singular skill.

I didn't make that system, neither did you, neither did anyone in these four forums. The FCC took a big chunk out of it (license classes and morsemanship skill) with the Restructuring of 2000 and that pissed off the Title-Rank-Status seekers. Devout morsemen are angry and venting steam because their self-esteem has fallen.

>> Robeson has been all full of himself in here about his alleged "USMC service" yet he has presented zero-point-zero evidence from anyone else (or any legitimate agency) that he ever served on active USMC duty for any of his claimed "18 years."

Simply amazing. EIGHTEEN years alleged on active duty and he can't supply a single photo or document to support his claim? In November of this year I can truthfully say I've been in the southern California aerospace business 50 years. I have all sorts of documentation and photos on that which I may fully digitize some day (some are already digitized). Some time ago I posted my resume in here...which only made Robesin ballistic then since he has NO comparable experience in industry and cannot prove any radio experience other than amateur and alleged "chief operator" status at some small MARS station long ago. [that was before his less-than-a-half-year as a purchasing agent at a small set top box maker]

In another recent post, Robesin keeps referring to a "CV." That's an acronym for the Latin 'curriculum vitae,' a list of life experiences (education, work experience). In the electronics industry, indeed in MOST industries, those applying for jobs don't present a curriculum vitae, just a RESUME of education-work experience. Some academics may use "CV" but Personnel departments still look over resumes. Just one more little gaffe on Robesin's part, trying to LOOK experienced when he is NOT.

>> Even though he NOW thinks of himself AS the amateur radio service personified (anything against him is somehow against ALL radio amateurs), he is still parodying the "Emperor."

Another sign of his megalomania, purporting to "represent all" and, by extension, anyone against Him is "against all radio amateurs." Robesin desperately needs SOMETHING to hold up his self-esteem and he uses amateur radio for that selfish purpose. It is like his infamous snot-on-the-moustache CAP flight suit picture, big on rank, title, and with implications of status. CAP is NOT about amateur radio but Robesin keeps on harping about it as if it "proved" something about his amateur radio abilities. He does the same with his "ER nurse qualifications" but those have absolutely nothing to do with radio, amateur or professional.

But, challenge Robesin or call him in error and one will be inundated with personal insults. Robeson MUST be right and he MUST rule. Civil comportment be damned with Robeson in newsgroups. Those newsgroups were (in his mind) created to showcase Him?

LenAnderson@ieee.org tried the same old tired rhetoric:

Huge snip of same stuff Lennie's trashed the NG with for years.....

No, Lennie...All YOU had to do was start in with the Nazi terms, elitist, etc etc etc.

Google archives refer.

I'd say you had a pretty good insight to yourself....

Hmmmmmm...Lessee......

Yep.

Perfect fit.

There's a MIL SPEC on that as all "long-time design engineers" should know; such parts are even used in commercial market electronics. It's really irrelevant HOW capacitors are marked as long anyone using them can know their value and working voltage and tolerance and apply them properly.

Can anybody give me advice on which frequencies I should be targeting for my first scanner purchase - in Oskaloosa, Iowa?

Do I need digital, or is my area mostly analog? I'm looking to start out cheap, but don't want to start out disappointed, so any advice on frequencies and analog/vs digital for my specific area would be helpful.

thx

Okay, so I find my frequencies here - http://www.radioreference.com/modules.php?name=RR&ctid=846

but I still can't tell if its digital or analog.  Any hints there?

Everything there is analog (even the RACOM trunked system you see the link to at the top) with the exception of the Alliant Energy system which, being iDen, can't be monitored with any existing scanner. So a Pro97 or a Uniden 246 or 330 (or even a Pro95) will do just fine. Whichever scanner you decide to get, get the programming cable (Unidens come with one) and some programming software (there are trial versions of the good ones, Uniden, ARC and Starrsoft).

Thanks for the reply/info. I'm thinking of starting with a PRO-2052 since they are on sale for a hundred bucks right now. It sounds like that will work for now then. It has the serial in/out so that I can program it and get the frequency info for streaming (so the wife and I can both listen and see frequency info from work).

Now you have me thinking though, the pro97 is not much more expensive and it's pretty portable. I wonder if I'll actually utilize the ability to grab the frequency info for streaming.. or maybe the portability would be better... sigh decisions... decisions..

I figure after I get "hooked", I'll be looking for something a little nicer, but if one of these will work for now, that's cool.

Thanks again!

Here's the picture...My Mother is going on a cruise in December. I've been trying to get her into scanning. The cruise starts in Sydney Australia IIRC, and then proceeds around the New Zealand Islands.

I'm going to program in the international maritime frequencies and the on board ship frequencies (I may not have all of those BTW)

Haven't googled yet (but will). What would be good frequencies to program in while she cruises and is in port(s) other than the VHF Marine freqs? Especially anything she could hear on the ship, coming from the land.

She'll be using my Pro-95 (on which I still haven't figured out the trunking...sigh) and she is definitely not technically minded. I'll just be teaching her how to lock/unlock channels and banks, use the squelch and volume control. I'll do all the programming.

Thanks for any and all suggestions....Hmm maybe I'll throw in both her airports of departure....Something to listen to while she's waiting <g>

Eric

Hello Brian,

This "dispute manufacturing" technique probably predates Robeson by centuries... :-)

Anyway, it is an old, old technique of computer-modem comms and was seen on ARPANET back before the first BBSs existed.

It's a way of bluff by the "manufacturer" to get around actually replying to some challenge made by others. That's usually accompanied by the manufacturer's veiled or outright personal insults levelled against the challenger. Robeson uses the latter more than the former.

Don't know if I 100% agree with your code speeds but I do thing the NO Code should be for 1 year and none renewable.
I had to take my license in front of the FCC and not so VE who may or may not help you out to get a license.
As I am a big VHFer I don't know how these NO Code guys are going to understand beacons. They are all code and most at 10 ~ 20 wpm. I guess the next thing will be, they will want all beacons either digital or voice. YUK!
Not up in the GHZ range yet but maybe some day.

Hey, "Slow," you might want to check your message headers a bit more carefully. I am not Mark. Neither am I a "mark" for con games. :-)

Oh, my, another one with "stupid." Tsk, tsk, tsk. :-)

Yup, a fledgling "dispute manufacturer" busy practicing...

"Slow," I've been involved in radio for 53 years. Most of that time as a professional. As a part of that, I once "worked" a station ON the moon. No bounce needed. Quarter million mile DX.
Can you top that as an amateur? :-)

Same thing happened to mine.   The display seems to be a standard PAGER display. I was thinking if I can find  a similar pager, just swapping the display out.

Wow...you will be REALLY popular with VEs...FCC too...

Wayyyy too low. 100%! Nothing less...

Wayyyy too low. 30 WPM for General, 80 WPM for Extra!

Why? Was it kidnapped? Lost along with Apollo 11 data?

BRING BACK SPARK! The very first RF transmitter in amateur radio! Preserve the past! Honor "sparky" tradition!

Hey, "Slow," here's a better idea: Let's get you to a cryogenic chamber and FREEZE you and your longing for times of your youth. You want everything FROZEN, don't you? Cool? Cool...

   Noooooo.  I worked a STATION on the moon, namely one of the ALSEP (Apollo Lunar Surface Experiment Package).  Sent a command to the SWS (Solar Wind Spectrometer) part, got the response back on earth.  Two-way.  The ALSEPs are now silent, nobody can work them.   :-)

Apparently you are not an serious scanner in the Boise county either.

I did not ask for a reprint of free listings off the FCC site?

His, "Sorry Hans, MARS >>>IS<<< Amateur Radio." would make a good, quick, clean case study for some grad student of psychology.  It has all of the elements of that pathology and google serves it up in seconds.

   Quite true, Brian.  Those of us who were here 1 to 2 years ago had an eyefull of his continuous - but faulty - efforts to "tell" us all about His fantasy of things.  :-)

Mainly it was his abject refusal to back down when faced with definitive directives by the government (DoD) in regard to the Military Affiliate Radio System. Weeks went by without his admitting that the Directive existed. His final communication on the subject would NOT openly admit to error but was laced with more personal insults on his challengers. Sad.

Little Billy Beeper had him pegged - he's nuts.

Such complete ignorance of MARS, yet somehow, he claims that he was the Assistant NCOIC of a NMC MARS Station on Okinawa. Simply unbeleivable.

Accusations and insults. Whichever grad student locks on to him first is one lucky SOB. All the work is done.

Selective amnesia...

With the advent of the No-Code Technician license, memorization became a bad, bad thing.

Most issues of QST have a minimum of at least one walk down memory lane, usually with a key or keyer in one hand.

I think everyone has some of that to one degree or another.  It's unhealthy to allow that fear to paralyze you.

There will be new challenges before us tomorrow, but we won't know about them.  We will still be arguing if a morse code exam is necessary.

My dishonest, transparent tactics...

Odd, saying what you mean and meaning what you say have become dishonest.

I'm surprised that Klein allows any feedback in his oscillator circuits.

Talk of any kind of vibrator might draw inuendo from robesin.

Huh? Lets let the FCC tell us that it is impractical to have everyone take mode exams. Or lets let the council of VECs tul us the same thing.

If the league pushes the morse testing issue too hard, it will become obvious to the 25% that are members.

Yep. Testing must become more "legitimate" for hobbyists than for 1957. The Russians. Sputnik. CW beacon signal on 20M.

And I wasn't born yet.

But the technilogy was worthwhile and moved forward - without morse code.

But please don't bother - the noise level in RR is pretty low, and we

Mark, Just ignore them.

They only tease you because of the stupid things you say when you follow up. Just ignore them and they'll give up.

Stop giving them reasons to tease you. It only makes you look more stupid.

Take a break from the radio groups for a while, Maybe work on your moon bounce some more.

Hams could save more lives by supporting a blood drive than than standing by waiting for that emergency to use morse code.
I hear about hams supporting public service, my daughter DID 75 hrs of public service last year as a ten year old Girl Scout. I learned CW even got up to 20 wpm but I dont think it should be any more of a requirement than any other mode of operation. There is a lot of hams who may not be able to save anyones lives but they could save their own by turning off the radio for an hour and taking a walk

Is anyone interested in recording weak signals emitting from remote areas such as -

LOCATION: N44.02986 W116.03125 (NAD83)
FREQ: 218.000 - 218.999 MHz

At the same time as voice from the same general area -
FREQ: 34.000 - 34.999 MHz
FREQ: 159.000 - 159.999 MHz

Just wondering...

Do you really think what you post on a newsgroup is going to make ANY difference in the real world...

Just because you bitch and moan on here, isnt going to make them revise the licensing rules..

Because Ham radio is dying. If you make it easier, you can attract more losers who may have joined earlier. Shortwave and Ham radio is dead. If you ask the man on the street what AM or FM is? They can answer you ,it"s what the hear on their car radio. The difference is the buttons on the radio. If you ask them what shortwave is? They would not have a fucking clue. It's DEAD. Get a life.

Mark, Just ignore them.

They only tease you because of the stupid things you say when you follow up. Just ignore them and they'll give up.

Stop giving them reasons to tease you. It only makes you look more stupid.

Take a break from the radio groups for a while, Maybe work on your moon bounce some more.

I'm not the one who misread "capacitors didn't ESCAPE getting color coded" for "capacitors didn't GET color coded" - YOU DID!

I have a Techtoyz from Optoelectronics Micro DTMF decoder that has been sitting in a drawer for several years that I just tried to use today. I put in a fresh battery and it did come on but displayed fragmented and incomplete characters. So I switched it to receive and hit redial on a phone and it did read the number dialed, but again displayed fragmented characters. When switched to recall, it displays the incomplete characters. There does not seem to be a visible user reset button on the unit.

Any ideas?
Is this worth repairing and is there actually anyone that would repair such an item?
Or should I just toss it?

Thanks,

Phil

>I'm not the one who misread "capacitors didn't ESCAPE getting color

   Nice attempt at misdirection, but a very old technique.  :-)

   That sort of misdirection is puerile (meaning childish).
   If you have some bona fides on English grammar and some false idea that ALL must be literal with NO departure from such literalness, please state them. Otherwise go into auto-fornication mode since we ain't buyin that, homie. :-)

Let's reprise. First you state that capacitors were never color coded. You got called on that and corrected by more than myself. Secondly, you've never admitted being wrong or corrected. Third, you try to (badly) convince others that those who corrected your statement are "wrong" or "at fault."

Amazing. You make mistakes and then try to convince all that those mistakes never happened or that it is "wrong" to try to correct your mistakes! :-)

Here's some more to chew on:

RFCs (Radio Frequency Chokes, inductors) in axial-lead plastic tubular packages are STILL marked with color-code bands. There's a MIL SPEC on that as all "long-time design engineers" should know; such parts are even used in commercial market electronics. It's really irrelevant HOW capacitors are marked as long anyone using them can know their value and working voltage and tolerance and apply them properly.

There are 7 (seven) amateur radio licensees in the USA that could answer to "Al Klein." Are you one of those?

I can say without hesitation that I am NOT a licensed amateur. I am a licensed commercial-professional in radio and have been so for 50 years, beginning in military 24/7 big-time HF communications 53 1/2 years ago. I have all sorts of valid documentation on that and some in here have seen some of that. Do you have ANYTHING in the way of ID? On the Internet?

Or, are you going to scribble meaningless misdirections in here, attempting to portray some personal "outrage" for being corrected? Especially about a well-known electronic component identification method which you don't seem to know yet others can verify?

I'll just put you down as an IMPOSTER poster, one of those wanna-bees who might never have been anything but really, really wants to be someone. That's up to you. I don't care. I've seen your kind on the Internet, on the Bulletin Board Systems since 1984. None have anything worthwhile to contribute but all wanting to be a SOMEBODY on screens.

Mark, Just ignore them.

They only tease you because of the stupid things you say when you follow up. Just ignore them and they'll give up.

Stop giving them reasons to tease you. It only makes you look more stupid.

Take a break from the radio groups for a while, Maybe work on your moon bounce some more.

if so it might have got damp and the little cardonloaded edge connector on the glass might be dirty from it.
if you can lightly push on the display does it work better

It is lcd display. But pushing on the display doesn't help. I think there must be something a bit more serious wrong with it because when I turn it off, it won't always turn back on unless I take out the battery, put it back in and start over again.

Taking out the battery resets it.

If you can open it up, see if you can unplug the display - either pull the display out of the socket or pull the connector off the display (very carefully). Blow the connector out and wipe the card edge of the display with a lint-free cloth (linen or a clean t-shirt).

Sitting a drawer for years can make the connection between the display and the connector oxidize, so some of the signals aren't getting through. Then, again, the display could just have gone bad. But cleaning the connection won't cost anything.

No, first YOU misunderstood "didn't escape being color coded" as meaning "didn't get color coded". Then you tried to weasel out of looking like the ass you are by looking even more stupid. You're not worth my time.

I agree Bob, and maybe we'd have better operators as a result. Considering the waning interest in our dying hobby though, all that would probably do is eliminate even more operators from the ranks, leading the FCC to reduce our bands even more by selling them to the highest bidder.

Ham radio was so much better back in the late 70's, when I first became licensed. People were polite, and the radio had a mystique to it. With the internet and the immediate gratification that everyone seems to expect these days, Ham Radio is undesirable; having to hunt for contacts when you can just IM someone? Having to work for a license? Not anymore, no one wants to put any effort into anything when they have an easier alternative. Unfortunately, the good old days are gone, and ham radio is in the sunset of its existence.

   What is to "misunderstand?"  Brian Burke wrote in that fashion, perhaps too colloquially for your absolutely-literal standards of English, but it was perfectly clear to most readers here.

>Then you tried to weasel out of Trying to insult those who challenge your "knowledge" of electronic components isn't going to win you any points.

The FACT is that capacitors and axial-lead inductors have been color-coded for decades. That can be verified by looking at component manufacturers' catalogs and several textbooks (even going back to the ITT "Green Bible" of the 50s) as well as the ARRL Handbooks (several years worth).

You call that "stupid?"

I wouldn't. Any self-respecting worker who has been in electronics for years wouldn't.

Had you wanted to be "civil" about it, you could have simply acknowledged your mistake, stopped trying to build a Mt. Everest out of a teaspoon of sand, and gone on with life. You did not. You have MANUFACTURED a dispute, insulted your challengers, and implied a number of things, all without any referencible data.

Your definition of "stupidity" seems to be that of ANYONE WHO DISAGREES WITH YOU or one who DOES NOT HONOR AND BOW-DOWN TO YOUR SUPPOSED MAJESTY AS AN AMATEUR.

Unfortunately, those "definitions" seem endemic to pro-coders, those who insist on keeping a morse code test for amateur radio into the far future. That viewpoint is entirely EMOTIONAL based on your own experiences, has no validity in the supposed "necessity" of keeping that morse code test in USA amateur radio licensing.

"You did it so everyone else has to..."

That's a selfish, self-righteous viewpoint in my opinion.

It confuses the actual necessities of a government regulating agency trying to mitigate many, many users of the civil radio spectrum with some fraternal-organization in-house "rules" of just one radio service out of many, "rules" that were established decades ago.

You cannot support your "cause" with anything but throwing personal insults at your challengers. You have already LOST your arguments concerning the morse code test issue. You win NOTHING except in your imagination.

It is even worse, perhaps sociopathic in that over-the-top self-righteousness, to claim you are a "better human being" just for having taken a morse code test...as an AMATEUR.
You seem to look down your royal nose at all who wish to remove the code test from amateur radio licensing. Especially so when you cannot establish your bona fides of "long-term experience" supposedly in radio beyond amateur activities.

>You're not worth my time.

Obviously not, "your majesty." :-)

Here's a suggestion: Drop the "outraged" act and start thinking about the SUBJECT, not your own emotionalism. One good way to make you feel better to yourself is to find a morsemanship-support group. Such a group can sit around and praise one another. Makes all in the group warm and fuzzy holding the same opinion. Its also a way to hold off the future and any changes in regulations, but only within your own fantasies.

An alternative is to just LEAVE rec.radio.amateur.policy. Few in here see you as the Final Arbiter of what is "good" and what is "bad" in amateurism.

Leave or stay. Your choice. Matters not to me. Government will continue - in a democratic-process fashion - to serve ALL citizens, not just one group of radio spectrum users. A group, I might add, that is a distinct MINORITY of all radio users.

Think on that. [few pro-coders do]

It's a "sort-of" reminder, Mark, but let's clear up something:
I don't personally "loathe" this "exmarine." That person isn't worth much in here, always insulting those who just disagree with his viewpoint. It's not possible to have any sort of dialogue with Major Dud. :-)

It's pretty much the same with all the self-righteous, ultra-conservative (about the code test) pro-coders. Sigh.

As to Klein, all he seems to want in here is to FIGHT. In that regard he is a clone of Robeson and first cousin to several others in here. He is too haughty to correspond with anyone who disagrees with him.

Perhaps someone once jammed an IC above his arm?
He has been going around "with a chip on his 'shoulder'" ever since... :-) >the waning interest in our dying hobby though, all that would probably do is >eliminate even more operators from the ranks, leading the FCC to reduce our >bands even more by selling them to the highest bidder.

1. The FCC has NOT "reduced 'your' bands," nor is it somehow threatening to "sell them" to anyone. Had you bothered to look at this process of AUCTIONING certain COMMERCIAL bands and the Congressional laws establishing it, you would have seen that it does NOT apply to radio amateurs.

2. Since WARC-79 'you' have gotten MORE BANDS and that has increased up to a few years ago when 'you' got the five 60m channels.

3. There doesn't seem to be any "waning interest" in USA amateur radio considering the overall licensee numbers. The newcomer licensees are - just managing - to keep the licensee numbers in numeric bouyancy, almost keeping pace with those letting their licenses lapse. See www.hamdata.com FCC data page.

4. "Dying hobby" must be entirely subjective since there is no real sign that amateur radio equipment and supplies companies are closing down nor has the ARRL threatened to dissolve their $15M per annum profit publishing business. Since 1990 three INDEPENDENT amateur radio publications have ceased, primarily due to lack of advertising revenue, NOT for interest in the hobby.

>Ham radio was so much better back in the late 70's, when I first became >licensed. People were polite, and the radio had a mystique to it.

I find that highly subjective, primarily in comparison to the times of the mid-50s. Let's look at the "mystique" of the late 1970s insofar as radio communications are concerned:

1. Communications satellites were well-established for international video-audio relay with thousands of circuits for voice and data. More would come in the next three decades until the geosynchronous orbit positions were filled before the 1990s were over.

2. HF spectrum users, the majority being commercial-government prior to the 1970s, were LEAVING HF for more reliable 24/7 circuit throughput IN the beginning of the 1970s. The peak use of HF occurred during the mid-1950s to 1960.

3. Tens of thousands of radio communications licensees (with all their users and equipment) were ALREADY up and communicating from low-VHF on up. That would continue to grow in the next three decades until the FCC and NTIA had to expand the VHF-and-up spectrum for such radio services as PLMRS (Private Land Mobile Radio Services), maritime radio (for private boat owners and inland-waterway and harbor comms).

4. MILLIONS of Citizen Band radios existed, CB (on HF) was created in 1958, two decades before the late-1970s. Licensing of CB had been dropped and the off-shore radio makers had established themselves in the radio market, including CB.

5. "Radio" was KNOWN to the general public as a means to communicate and had been known for decades. "Known" in a sense beyond the obvious of TV and AM and FM broadcasting and international telecasts. The public did NOT "know" that morse code modes were used except perhaps for watching the last of the "Westerns" on TV and old WW2 movies.

6. In the mid-1950s the BIG communicators on HF were already in a process of change of mode. Teleprinter data was the overwhelming majority mode for written communications for commercial and government users of the ONLY long-haul comm circuits. Microwave radio relay for both short and long distances on land had already begun. Only the maritime world held to their morse code modes with, rarely, voice on AM.

7. In the late 1970s 'you' already had solid-state HF radios (transmitters barely reaching 100 W PEP) with the beginnings of synthesized frequencies. VFOs, now reliable and stable, were a standard feature for frequency control. In the mid-1950s frequency control of the then-standard tube type radios was essentially one-crystal/one-frequency type unless one could afford a very expensive (then) "Collins" (or equivalent) manufactured radio.

8. The Semiconductor Era had already begun in ALL of electronics and new techniques and methods were the order of the day in comparison to the limitations of tube architecture in the mid-1950s. In that regard, there IS a "mystique."

   I would state that a vast cornucopia of things were suddenly opened by the many-plateau advances in electronics technology, sometimes happening at a rate of advancement that was near overwhelming. Having been a part of the electronics industry for 53 years I not only saw it but was immersed in it, doing it while keeping up with it.

Unless there has been some "stealth" action of government to redefine FCC rules, amateur radio has ALWAYS been considered a non-commercial AVOCATION. It is a HOBBY without having to be stated as such in Parts 1 and 97 of Title 47 C.F.R. There is NO legal necessity to "WORK" for a hobby pursuit, is there?

Absolutely YES, I will opt for an "easier alternative" to ANYTHING! When I began in Big-Time HF radio communications, the "easier alternative" ALREADY existed in the products of Teletype Corporation. The teleprinter had already displaced manual morse code modes for the majority of messaging even before WW2 (in business and government and the military).

So, if 'we' all do this 'work' thing, who is going to give 'us' this permission to exist on the same planet as all you extras? Would 'we' be FIRED if 'we' didn't 'work?" [delusions of Donald Trump there?]

Ah..."not enough EFFORT being put forth" by us not-licensed-in-the-AMATEUR-radio-service? Right...some of us have been professionals in radio and electronics for decades, WITHOUT any morsemanship tests! Even though we've put our own time into keeping up with radio and electronics for all those decades (without renumeration for those efforts), that isn't good enough for you? Here, have a [rude Italian hand gesture]

The FCC was NEVER chartered as an academic institution and those valued [suitable for framing] licenses are NOT "grades earned" (after all that 'work'). The job of the FCC is just regulate, mitigate ALL civil radio in the USA. Mere 'tenure' as a radio amateur does NOT make someone better nor does all the snarling about "nobody wants to 'work' for their license" change anything. You want the US amateur radio regulations to FREEZE in those old days ways? Fine, send in your proposal to the FCC and tell them why it should remain in the freezer. They MUST, by law, examine ALL proposals submitted by citizens. [I wouldn't expect that they actually put forth an NPRM on keeping regs on ice, but they WILL look at it]

>Unfortunately, the good old days are gone, and ham radio is in the sunset of its existence.

1. Take your sunglasses off or step out from behind the curtains. It is a BRIGHT day with sun HIGH in the sky for amateur radio...unless you are one of the olde-tymers who refuse to acknowledge change.

2. There exist new medications that can alleviate depression and, perhaps, a feeling of ennui. See your doctor about that.

3. "The good old days are gone?" THANK GOD! I was IN those 'good old days' and am damn glad that radio and electronics has improved, gotten easier, enabled us (except morsemen) to do more and better things! I look FORWARD to each and every improvement that makes things EASIER! I've already done lots of things with lots of personal labor and I sincerely APPRECIATE whatever labor-saving, work-saving things that are available now.

Hey, if you WORK real hard, study real hard, maybe you can come up with a TIME MACHINE! Yeah, right, it could take you back to those "good old days" that you seem to like so much. Like back to a time when "ham" was a pejorative expressed by professional morsemen? :-)

Teleprinter data was the overwhelming majority mode for written communications for commercial and government users of the ONLY long-haul comm circuits. Microwave radio relay for both short and long distances on land had already begun. Only the maritime world held to their morse code modes with, rarely, voice on AM.

1: No more automatic renewals. Individuals must retest and pass all elements required for their license class.

2: The passing score for written exams needs to be raised to 85%.

3: Code elements should be 13 wpm for General, and 20 wpm for Extra.

4: Make the no-code license one year non-renewable.

Let's take back ham radio.

Mark, Just ignore them.

They only tease you because of the stupid things you say when you follow up. Just ignore them and they'll give up.

Stop giving them reasons to tease you. It only makes you look more stupid.

Take a break from the radio groups for a while, Maybe work on your moon bounce some more.

If you're into definitions, look up "sarcasm" (which an aphorism frequently is). But an aphorism can also be an opinion, whether true or not.

   Tsk, Klein, you don't write enough to read.  It's all about implications, inferences, and vague "truths" which don't establish anything.  Then you get pissed off when others don't accept your "word" on things.

   I will ask directly:  ARE you an olde-fahrt?  Or long-timer?
   If so, HOW LONG?

   Try not to be too vague on this.  Real truth will establish your "rep" in here.  So far you don't have much of a "rep" except we all know you are a PRO-CODER.

> "They didn't" ... "escape". Looks like the

I can't see anyone named "They didn't" in the Google message list, nor that of "escape."

Simply put, if you can't establish any bona fides for your alleged long-timerness, I'll just put you in the "imposter" list. [lots of folks from here in there...]

I've bought one of the Ramsey kits which should arrive this week.
http://www.ramseyelectronics.com/cgi-bin/commerce.exe?preadd=action&key=DDF1 I'll let you guys know how well it works when it's assembled.
Tracking to within a couple of houses is easy even without a radio that has a signal meter but the doppler will make it all that much faster.
the serial ratbags and spastics in Sydney will get a fright when its up and running. Unfortunately Sydney repeaters are going through one of those phases where every sub-moron with a radio is having an obsessive compulsive episode and we have about 20 whispering retards making the repeater unusable. Hopefully within the next 4 weeks I can post an excel spreadsheet with all their info. they usually piss off when they lose their anonymity.

I bought a Pro-30 for $5 today. Took a chance. At first it works, it scans but no audio. I open it and 4 wires are off. If I clip a earphone onto the leads marked Earphone it works, But I'm not sure where to hook the speaker wires. When I hook them up where I think they should go Blue to Blue and White to white.. I get the programing beep, but no Audio. Can someone help me with this. I'm looking at where to solder 4 wires and my paperweight is a scanner. Thanks, Dave in PA WB3EKN

Mark, Just ignore them.

They only tease you because of the stupid things you say when you follow up.  Just ignore them and they'll give up.

Stop giving them reasons to tease you.  It only makes you look more stupid.

Take a break from the radio groups for a while,  Maybe work on your
moon bounce some more.

My statement if you enacted a standard that would in fact keep me from passing, that would kill the ARS. That sort would require far more than merely adding schamtics or going to short answer questions. it would involved a test that would serious chalange Cecil and Len Anderson both RF engineers, doing that would kill the ars as would the asiine proposals of Mr Slow Code and many others your notions are simplely not exexutable in anything like the current sytem

the notion that multible guess is acceptable for pilots and drivers (amoug others) but ham radio ops is silly

As far as I know, there is no governmental PhD class license and therefore no governmental ranks of those with PhDs.

You don't seem to know much about 1950's ham licenses.
You didn't know that Conditional was a General exam taken by mail. You don't know there were many Advanced class hams in the 1950's faithfully renewing their licenses. My Elmer was an Advanced licensee. Here's a quote from a 1957 ARRL License Manual: "Holders of Advanced Class licenses may renew them so long as they can comply with renewal requirements."

you have heard from the appointed legel representives and you did not listen to them either

but indeed enlight me what value is derived from the knowledge that an occiclaotr is colpitss type or hartley

without adding something to mix they answer it has no value

if you are hearing anything seek medical help most like but you are misreading the stament

you can politely disagree with re;ligoous beliefes without labeling
them as nonsense

it is not polite to label such thigs as nonsense

if you were polite youd know that

Following your line of reasoning, skill with buggy whips should be part of the requirements for a driver's license.

I've seen them go anywhere from $100-$200 depending on condition and whether or not they have everything with them, box, charger, manual, etc..

Good luck, they're nice radio's.

Oh? I didn't know that we legally appointed "representatives" to tell

Plenty of value to those who have to work with oscillators of various types. It's difficult to design a circuit when you have no understanding of it.

Your contributions to these threads are what have no value.

When those telepathic representatives of yours became appointed to How would you know? You wouldn't recognize a fact if it came up to you and hit you.

Klein, you said you were an OF. Any olde-fahrt ought to KNOW that silver-mica capacitors were color-dot-coded for about a quarter century. [look in the 1976 ARRL Handbook] Those flat cases were eventually displaced by dipped silver-mica.

Paper tubular capacitors in molded plastic tubular casings were marked with color bands and were on the market for at least 15 years, maybe 20...until aced out by ceramic disc capacitors for general bypassing and coupling applications (by both tube and transistor architecture electronics).

ANYONE with hands-on experience in electronics between 1950 and about 1970 would KNOW that. [okay, folks, looks like there's another imposter here...at least this one isn't trying to pass hisself off as some marine NCO...:-)

not esp but you do seem bent and canother round of personal attack without basis substance or relavance but that is what the ProCode side has been resorting for years and that why the state of their cause is at such a low ebb

You are still using crayons but I doubt you know how to use a 1950 slide-rule...too complex for brass-pounders.

Oh, and FCC Field Offices were NOT 10 miles apart in the USA now, in 1956 (when I took a train 80 miles into Chicago), nor before then.

>Then we'd wait 3 years to receive our license which gave us time to Wrongo, olde-fahrt. Electrons, fields, and waves will ONLY obey THEIR rules. You can't "teach" them anything. All you can do is provide paths for them...on THEIR terms.

>Boy, those were the days. When a ham was a ham, brass was for pounding

That was well before 1960...like before WW2.

>These "young" whippersnappers get off too easy.

Pizza off, olde-fahrt. 51 years ago I would be walking a mile from a corner of an airfield NE of Tokyo to the transmitter house in the center which housed 41 HF transmitters ranging in power output from 1 KW to 40 KW. Not a single one of them used manual (morse code) radiotelegraphy modes. About two square miles of wire antennas doing 24/7 radio circuit transmission to CONUS, Hawaii, Phillippines, Okinawa, Korea, and a MAG in Vietnam. Six of those circuits used multichannel SSB (the commercial variety, like in-use prior to WW2).

I STARTED that HF transmitter site work in '53, NO military schooling on kilowatt transmitters, RTTY, or SSB and NO "CW" skill necessary.

>I say, rank priveleges on the basis of how big an RF burn you can take,

Sounds like you had TOO MANY of those "RF burns."

See Dr. Robeson in here...he will bandage your "burns" with one of his medical-practice certificates...those are sterile.

>I may have said it before: take the FCC out of it completely and go with >the FDA. Those boys know how to grade.

"Ham is the butchered meat of swine?"

Last guy I heard utter that phrase is SK...used to work with him (he was a code-tested Extra)...he came out with that every once in a while when some amateur morseman got too full of himself.

>(Too much tea this morning!)

Try a detox program, okay? QRT.

If MORSEMANSHIP is important to you, fine. Most of US find it a bit pretentious and downright silly.

If someone wants to use MORSEMANSHIP to elevate themselves above the rest, they are perched on very rickety stilts.

[I'll just add something like...]:

Stilts are needed by morsemen because their appearance, relative to REAL radio people, are very short. They try to gain "height" of their reputation by using 1930s standards in the year 2006. Tsk, they don't realize that their new "height" still falls short of everyone else...

where is your proof

without proving that I am not a telpath or simply smarter than you you can't proove that assertion

Indeed I asert the claim you can't know what you think, anymore than I can. based on science the human often decieves itself therfore you don't know in many cases what you truly think, anymore than I know what I truely think

maybe it is incorrect maybe it isn't that is the fact you can not prove otherwise

yep
you might as well admit it your arguement is totaly bankrupt you have nothing but personal attacks indeed I am ounder whemed with your perfromance Robeson took at least a year to desend so far in the personal attack realm as you have manged in roughly a month

You're not that important, Markie. Or that well educated that if you couldn't pass a test, very few others could.

Since you couldn't pass a final in a high school physics class, you aren't qualified to determine what someone with an earned EE could or couldn't do.  As one who earned mine, I am.

>the notion that multible guess is acceptable for pilots and drivers

So you don't understand the difference between "choice" and "guess".
We'll just add that to the *L*O*N*G* list of things you don't understand.

No, actually the SCOTUS said that it DOESN'T work, which is why they came up with a definition.

I purchased this aprox 8-10 yr ago after reading a MT review on it. I have never used it and it has just kicked around the house all that time.
The best description I can come up with is that it's sort of a portable amplified (uses 2 aa's) rabbit ear type antenna that the shack advertised for vhf/uhf/fm and MT seemed to think it was a great scanner antenna. I'll ship any place in the continental U.S. for $25. RM~

You called me impolite because of my religious view.

>you can politely disagree with re;ligoous beliefes without labeling
>them as nonsense

I didn't label any religious belief as nonsense - that's in your head, because you don't understand English.

>it is not polite to label such thigs as nonsense

It's not impolite to label nonsensical things as nonsense.

>if you were polite youd know that

If you were at least a tad intelligent, you'd know a lot that you don't know now.

So we have to give everyone a driver's license, even those who can't drive? And let everyone vote, even those who are mentally incompetent? No discrimination based on anything?

The Constitution doesn't prevent us from imposing standards, Markie.
And the law certainly doesn't guarantee that we're all equal, only that we all be given equal opportunity to EARN what we want. There's no Constitutional guarantee that the government will give us everything we want, or that it can't treat different people in accordance with those differences.

gee I got an an A in My HS physics class and for that matter a B in my course physics course on E&M theory I certainly am quailified again BTW you imply I cheated or somehow did not earn mine I did did I have to work as hard as you maybe not but then I don't think You should have had to work as hard as you did I regret I can' change that for you but the I did so you must BS is not going to carry on if I can lets not you want to tkaet the same notion into Radio why not hold pilots to same sort of stanards as Radio Ops after flying is a bit more dangerous

no becuase driving is dangerous peotcaily ham radio is not furtehr what evidence do you advance that Higher make beter radio ops indeed you reject the notion that higher IQ means much of anything > And let everyone vote, even those who are mentally >incompetent?

most esp we should not restrict the mentaly imcpomtant form from voting since the likely result in time is everyone being declared so > No discrimination based on anything?
not on something un related to the matter being regulated

Morse Code was never vital for Hams to be operate once we had voice we could have done away with such testing (aprt from the treaty) the requirement for Morse being to avoid the military on cw would have meant a voice that could read code would simply have to qsy everytime he heard CW)

today theere is NO requirement for CW testing. It is not needed that I know CW in order to operate at all. Indeed even if we don't stick to band plans I don't need to be able read a CW signal to know it is there, and reconize the frequency is in use
>
>The Constitution doesn't prevent us from imposing standards, Markie.
can't you show enough manner to call me by my name which is Mr Morgan since I gave you no leave to address me familier

>And the law certainly doesn't guarantee that we're all equal, only >that we all be given equal opportunity to EARN what we want.
and that anything in our way must relate to matter being regulated

no harm will result if I don't know Morse code many hams ven now on HF don't know it well enough to use indeed there was never a test to determine if we could use it on the air at all

I expect the Govt not to require mye to demstrate a skill that is completely uneeded in order to access public airwaves

the FCC (and I et al) have regrected as false all the arguements that Code testing makes one a better operator

you have advanced no real reason why I need to know without looking ti up whattype of occiclator a given circut is you adavnce no answer to how we would insure that the tests you want to see are fairly given and graded accross the country > There's

>no Constitutional guarantee that the government will give us >everything we want, or that it can't treat different people in >accordance with those differences.

no one is asking the govt me everything we want or the rest of the nosense you are spouting

you have not proven that assertion indeed your efforts have failed

However I am certain the FCC has not agreed with this notion likely longer than I have lived
